[3] Senator Williams, sponsor and floor manager of the Senate bill, submitted a special section-by-section explanation of the Senate-passed version of the bill; similarly, Senator Williams as Chairman of the Senate Conferees and Mr. Perkins, as Chairman of the House Conferees, submitted identical section-by-section explanations of the Conference-passed version of the bill which was adopted by both houses. These analyses are particularly relevant as they represent a more detailed explanation of all the provisions of the bill as viewed by the sponsors and legislative leaders.

92D CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 1746

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

JANUARY 22, 1971

Mr. HAWKINS (for himself, Mr. REID of New York, Mr. BINGHAM, Mrs. CHISHOLM, Mr. CLAY, Mr. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. CORMAN, Mr. DELLUMS, Mr. DENT, Mr. DIGGS, Mr. METCALFE, Mrs. MINK, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. NIX, Mr. RANGEL, and Mr. STOKES) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor

A BILL

To further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act".

SEC. 2. Section 701 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e) is amended as follows:

(a) Effective one year after the date of enactment of this Act, strike "twenty-five" wherever it appears therein and insert in lieu thereof "eight".

(b) In subsection (a) insert "governments, governmental agencies, political subdivisions," after "individuals,".

(c) In subsection (b) strike out "a State or political subdivision thereof" and insert in lieu thereof "the District of Columbia";

(d) In subsection (c) strike out "or an agency of a State or political subdivision of a State,".

(e) At the end of subsection (h) insert before the period a comma and the following: "and further includes any governmental industry, business, or activity".

SEC. 3. Section 702 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–1) is amended by striking out "or to an educational institution with respect to the employment of individuals to perform work connected with the educational activities of such institution".

SEC. 4. Section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (89 Stat. 259; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"PREVENTION OF UNLAWFUL EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

"SEC. 706. (a) The Commission is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unlawful employment practice as set forth in section 703 or 704 of this title.

"(b) Whenever a charge is filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved, or by a member of the Commission, alleging that an employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall serve a copy of the charge on such employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') and shall make an investigation thereof. Charges shall be in writing and shall contain such information and be in such form as the Commission requires. Charges shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is no reason to believe that the charge is true, it shall dismiss the charge and promptly notify the person claiming to be aggrieved and the respondent of its action. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such informal endeavors may be made public by the Commission, its officers or employees, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding without the written consent of the persons concerned. Any person who makes public information in violation of this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. The Commission shall make its determination on reasonable cause as promptly as possible and, as far as practicable, not later than one hundred and twenty days from the filing of the charge or, where applicable under subsection (c) or (d), from the date upon which the Commission is authorized to take action with respect to the charge.

"(c) In the case of a charge filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State, or political subdivision of a State, which has a State or local law prohibiting the unlawful employment practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, the Commission shall take no action with respect to the investigation of such charge before the expiration of sixty days after proceedings have been commenced under the State or local law: Provided, That such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effective date of such State or local law. If any requirement for the commencement of such proceedings is imposed by a State or local authority other than a requirement of the filing of a written and signed statement of the facts upon which the proceeding is based, the proceeding shall be deemed to have been commenced for the purposes of this subsection at the time such statement is sent by certified mail to the appropriate State or local authority.

"(d) In the case of any charge filed by a member of the Commission alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State or political subdivision of a State which has a State or local law prohibiting the practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof the Commission shall, before taking any action with respect to such charge, notify the appropriate State or local officials and, upon request, afford them a reasonable time, but not less than sixty days: Provided, That such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effective date of such State or local law, unless a shorter period is requested, to act under such State or local law to remedy the practice alleged.

"(e) A charge shall be filed within one hundred eighty days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred and a copy shall be served upon the person against whom such charge is made as soon as practicable thereafter, except that in a case of an unlawful employment practice

with respect to which the person aggrieved has initially instituted proceedings with a State or local agency with authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, such charge shall be filed by the person aggrieved within three hundred days after the alleged unlawful employment practive occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency.

"(f) If the Commission determines after attempting to secure voluntary compliance under subsection (b) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved, which determination shall not be reviewable in any court, the Commission shall issue and cause to be served upon the respondent a complaint stating the facts upon which the allegation of the unlawful employment practice is based, together with a notice of hearing before the Commission, or a member or agent thereof, at a place therein fixed not less than five days after the serving of such complaint. Related proceedings may be consolidated for hearing. Any member of the Commission who filed a charge in any case

"(g) A respondent shall have the right to file an answer to the complaint against him and with the leave of the Commission, which shall be granted whenever it is reasonable and fair to do so, may amend his answer at any time. Respondents and the person aggrieved shall be parties and may appear at any stage of the proceedings, with or without counsel. The Commission may grant such other persons a right to intervene or to file briefs or make oral arguments as amicus curiae or for other purposes, as it considers appropriate. All testimony shall be taken under oath and shall be reduced to writing.

"(h) If the Commission finds that the respondent has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons aggrieved by such unlawful employment practice an order requiring the respondent to cease and desist from such unlawful employment practice and to take such affirmative action, including reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice), as will effectuate the policies of this title: Provided, That interim earnings

or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the aggrieved person or persons shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. Such order may further require such respondent to make reports from time to time showing the extent to which he has complied with the order. If the Commission finds that the respondent has not engaged in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons alleged in the complaint to be aggrieved an order dismissing the complaint.

"(i) After a charge has been filed and until the record has been filed in court as hereinafter provided, the proceeding may at any time be ended by agreement between the Commission and the parties for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment practice, approved by the Commission, and the Commission may at any time, upon reasonable notice, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it. An agreement approved by the Commission shall be enforceable under subsection (k) and the provisions of that subsection shall be applicable to the extent appropriate to a proceeding to enforce an agreement.

"(k) The Commission may petition any United States court of appeals within any circuit wherein the unlawful employment practice in question occurred or wherein the respondent resides or transacts business for the enforcement of its order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, and shall file in the court the record in the proceedings as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon such filing, the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon the parties to the proceeding before the Commission, and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein and shall have power to grant such temporary relief, restraining order, or other order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Commission. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its member, or agent, shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon the filing of the record with it the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

"(l) Any party aggrieved by a final order of the Commission granting or denying, in whole or in part, the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in any United States court of appeals in the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question is alleged to have occurred or in which such party resides or transacts business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of

Columbia, by filing in such court a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission (and to the other parties to the proceeding before the Commission) and thereupon the Commission shall file in the court the certified record in the proceeding as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall proceed in the same manner as in the case of an application by the Commission under subsection (k), the findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive, and the court shall have the same jurisdiction to grant such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and in like manner to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Commission. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection or subsection (k) shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order of the Commission.

"(m) The provisions of the Act entitled 'An Act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes', approved March 23, 1932 (47 Stat. 70 et seq.; 29 U.S.C.

101–115), shall not apply with respect to (1) proceedings under subsection (k), (l), or (o) of this section, (2) proceedings under section 707 of this title, or (3) proceedings under section 715 of this title.

"(n) The Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by the General Counsel of the Commission.

"(o) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve the power of the Commission to grant effective relief in the proceeding the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending its final disposition of such charge, in the United States district court for any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful employment practice concerned is alleged to have been committed, or the judicial district in which the aggrieved person would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful employment practice, but, if the respondent is not found within any such judicial district, such an action may be brought in the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28, United States Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in all cases be considered a judicial district in which such an action might have been brought. Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such injunctive relief or temporary restraining order as it deems just and proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law. Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, except paragraph (a) (2) thereof, shall govern proceedings under this subsection."

SEC. 5. Section 707 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 261; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–6) is amended by adding the following new subsections:

"(e) Any record or paper required by section 709 (c) of this title to be preserved or maintained shall be made available for inspection, reproducton, and copying by the Commission, the Attorney General, or his representative, upon demand in writing directed to the person having custody, possession, or control of such record or paper. Unless otherwise ordered by a court of the United States, neither the Commission, the Attorney General, nor his representative shall disclose any record or paper produced pursuant to this title, or any reproduction or copy, except to Congress or any committee thereof, or to a governmental agency, or in the presentation of any case or proceeding before any court or grand jury. The United States district court for the district in which a demand is made or in which a record or paper so demanded is located, shall have jurisdiction to compel by appropriate process the production of such record or paper.

"(d) Effective on the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act, the functions of the Attorney General and the Acting Attorney General, as the case may be, under this section shall be transferred to the Commission, together with such personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available, or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred to the Commission hereby as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions pursuant to this subsection, and the Commission shall thereafter carry out such functions in the manner set forth in subsections (e) and (f) of this section.

"(e) In all suits commenced pursuant to this section prior to the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, proceedings shall continue without abatement, all court orders and decrees shall remain in effect, and the Commission shall be substituted as a party for the United States of America or the

Attorney General or Acting Attorney General, as appropriate.

"(f) Subsequent to the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, the Commission shall have authority to investigate and act on a charge of a pattern or practice of discrimination, whether filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved or by a member of the Commission: Provided, That all such actions shall be in accordance with the procedures set forth in section 706, including the provisions for enforcement and appellate review contained in subsections (k), (l), (m), and (n) thereof."

SEC. 6. Section 709 (b), (c), and (d) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 263; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–8(b)–(d)) are amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Commission may cooperate with State and local agencies charged with the administration of State fair employment practices laws and, with the consent of such agencies, may, for the purpose of carrying out its functions and duties under this title and within the limitation of funds appropriated specifically for such purpose, engage in and contribute to the cost of research and other projects of mutual interest undertaken by such agencies, and utilize the services of such agencies and their employees and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, may pay by advance or reimbursement such agencies and their employees for services rendered to assist the Commission in carrying out this title. In furtherance of such cooperative efforts, the Commission may enter into written agreements with such State or local agencies and such agreements may include provisions under which the Commission shall refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases specified in such agreements or under which the Commission shall relieve any person or class of persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed under this section. The Commission shall rescind any such agreement whenever it determines that the agreement no longer serves the interest of effective enforcement of this title.

"(c) Every employer, employment agency, and labor organization subject to this title shall (1) make and keep such records relevant to the determinations of whether unlawful employment practices have been or are being committed, (2) preserve such records for such periods, and (3) make such reports therefrom as the Commission shall prescribe by regulation or order, after public hearing, as reasonable, necessary, or appropriate for the enforcement of this title or the regulation or orders thereunder. The Commission shall, by regulations, require each employer, labor organization, and joint labor-management committee subject to this title which controls an apprenticeship or other training program to maintain such records as are reasonably necessary to carry out the purpose of this title, including, but not limited to, a list of applicants who wish to participate in such program, including the chronological order in which such applicants were received, and to furnish to the Commission upon request, a detailed description of the manner in which persons are selected to participate in the apprenticeship or other training program. Any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee which believes that the application to it of any regulation or order issued under this section would result in undue hardship may apply to the Commission for an exemption from the application of such regulation or order, and, if such application for an exemption is denied, bring a civil action in the United States district court for the district where such records are kept. If the Commission or the court, as the case may be, finds that the application of the regulation or order to the employer, employment agency, or labor organization in question would impose an undue hardship, the Commission or the court, as the case may be, may grant appropriate relief. If any person required to comply with the provisions of this subsection fails or refuses to do so, the United States district court for the district in which such person is found, resides or transacts business, shall, upon application of the Commission,

have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring him to comply.

"(d) In prescribing requirements pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, the Commission shall consult with other interested State and Federal agencies and shall endeavor to coordinate its requirements with those adopted by such agencies. The Commission shall furnish, upon request and without cost to any State or local agency charged with the administration of a fair employment practice law, information obtained pursuant to subsection (c) of this section from any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee subject to the jurisdiction of such agency. Such information shall be furnished on condition that it not be made public by the recipient agency prior to the institution of a proceeding under State or local law involving such information. If this condition is violated by a recipient agency, the Commission may decline to honor subsequent requests pursuant to this subsection."

SEC. 7. Section 710 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 264; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–9) is amended to read as follows:

"INVESTIGATORY POWERS

"SEC. 710. For the purpose of all hearings and investigations conducted by the Commission or its duly authorized agents or agencies, section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (49 Stat. 455; 29 U.S.C. 161) shall apply: Provided, That no subpena shall be issued on the application of any party to proceedings before the Commission until after the Commission has issued and caused to be served upon the respondent a complaint and notice of hearing under subsection (f) of section 706."

SEC. 8. (a) Section 703 (a) (2) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 255; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–2 (a) (2)) is amended by inserting the words "or applicants for employment" after the words "his employees".

(b) Section 703 (c) (2) of such Act (78 Stat. 255; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–2 (c) (2)) is amended by inserting the words "or applicants for membership" after the word "membership".

(c) Section 703 (h) of such Act (78 Stat. 257; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–2 (h)) is amended by striking out "to give and to act upon the results of any professionally developed ability test provided that such test, its administration or action upon the results is not designed, intended, or used to discriminate because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "to give and to act upon the results of any professionally developed ability test which is directly related to the determination of bona fide occupational qualifications reasonably necessary to perform the normal duties of the particular position concerned: Provided, That such test, its administration, or action upon the results is not designed, intended, or used to discriminate because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin."

(2) Section 704 (b) of such Act is amended by (A) striking out "or employment agency" and inserting in lieu thereof "employment agency, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs.", and (B) inserting a comma and the words "or relating to admission to, or employment in, any program established to provide apprenticeship or other training by such a joint labor-management committee" before the word "indicating".

shall have been submitted to the Senate, or (2) after the adjournment sine die of the session of the Senate in which such nomination was submitted".

(2) The fourth sentence of section 705 (a) of such Act is amended to read as follows: "The Chairman shall be responsible on behalf of the Commission for the administrative operations of the Commission, and shall appoint, in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, such officers, agents, attorneys, hearing examiners, and employees as he deems necessary to assist it in the performance of its functions and to fix their compensation in accordance with the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates: Provided, That assignment, removal, and compensation of hearing examiners shall be in accordance with sections 3105, 3344, 5362, and 7521 of title 5, United States Code."

(f) Section 705 (g) (1) of such Act (78 Stat. 258; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–4 (g) (1)) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: "and to accept voluntary and uncompensated services, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3679 (b) of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 665 (b))".

(g) Section 705 (g) (6) of such Act (78 Stat. 259;

42 U.S.C. 2000e–4(g)(6)) is amended by striking out "section 706" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 715".

(h) Section 713 of such Act (78 Stat. 265; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–12) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c) Except for the powers granted to the Commission under subsection (h) of section 706, the power to modify or set aside its findings, or make new findings, under subsections (i) and (k) of section 706, the rulemaking power as defined in subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, with reference to general rules as distinguished from rules of specific applicability, and the power to enter into or rescind agreements with State and local agencies, as provided in subsection (b) of section 709, under which the Commission agrees to refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases or under which the Commission agrees to relieve any person or class of persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed by section 709, the Commission may delegate any of its functions, duties, and powers to such person or persons as the Commission may designate by regulation, including functions, duties, and powers with respect to investigating, conciliating, hearing, determining, ordering, certifying, reporting, or otherwise acting as to any work, business, or matter: Provided, That nothing in this subsection authorizes the Commission to provide for persons other than those referred to in clauses (2) and (3) of subsection (b) of section 556 of title 5 of the United States Code to conduct any hearing to which that section applies.

"(d) The Commission is authorized to delegate to any group of three or more members of the Commission any or all of the powers which it may itself exercise."

(i) Section 714 of such Act (78 Stat. 265; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–13) is amended by striking out "section 111" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 111 and 1114".

(j) Section 715 of such Act (78 Stat. 265; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–14) is amended to read as follows:

"CIVIL ACTIONS BY PERSONS AGGRIEVED

"SEC. 715. (a) If (1) the Commission determines that there is no reasonable cause to believe the charge is true and dismisses the charge in accordance with section 706(b), (2) finds no probable jurisdiction and dismisses the charge, or (3) within one hundred and eighty days after a charge is filed with the Commission, or within one hundred and eighty days after expiration of any period of reference under section 706 (c) or (d), the Commission has not either (i) issued a complaint in accordance with section 706(f), (ii) determined that there is not reasonable cause to believe the charge is true and dismissed the charge in accordance with section 706(b) or found no probable jurisdiction and dismissed the charge, or (iii) entered into a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved in accordance with section 706(f) or an agreement with the parties in accordance with section 706(i), the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and within sixty days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Commission to intervene in such civil action if it certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon the commencement of such civil action, the Commission shall be divested of jurisdiction over the proceeding and shall take no further action with respect thereto: Provided, That, upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (c) or (d) or the efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance.

"(b) Each United States district court and each United States court of a place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of actions brought under this section. Such an action may be brought in any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful employment practice is alleged to have been committed, or in the judicial district in which the plaintiff would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful employment practice, but if the respondent is not found within any such district, such an action may be brought within the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28 of the United States Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in all cases be considered a district in which the action might have been brought. Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper.

"(c) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable by

the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice). Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. No order of the court shall require the admission or reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union or the hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any backpay, if such individual was refused admission, suspended, or expelled or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin or in violation of section 704 (a).

"(d) In any case in which an employer, employment agency, or labor organization fails to comply with an order of a court issued in a civil action brought under subsection (a), the Commission may commence proceedings to compel compliance with such order.

"(e) Any civil action brought under subsection (a) and any proceedings brought under subsection (d) shall be subject to appeal as provided in sections 1291 and 1292 title 28, United States Code.

"(f) In any action or proceeding under this section, the court, in its discretion, may allow the prevailing plaintiff a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs."

SEC. 9. (a) Section 5314 of title 5 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(55) Chairman, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission."

(b) Clause (72) of section 5315 of such title is amended to read as follows:

"(72) Members, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (4)."

(c) Clause (111) of section 5316 of such title is repealed.

SEC. 10. Sections 706 and 710 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended by this Act, shall not be applicable to charges filed with the Commission prior to the effective date of this Act.

SEC. 11. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"NONDISCRIMINATION IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 717. (a) All personnel actions affecting employees or applicants for employment in the competitive service (as defined in section 2102 of title 5 of the United States Code) or employees or applicants for employment in positions with the District of Columbia government covered by the Civil Service Retirement Act shall be made free from any discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

"(b) The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission shall have authority to enforce the provision of subsection (a) and shall issue such rules, regulations, orders, and instructions as it deems necessary and appropriate to carry out its responsibilities hereunder, and the head of each executive department and agency and the appropriate officers of the District of Columbia shall comply with such rules, regulations, orders, and instructions: Provided, That such rules and regulations shall provide that an employee or applicant for employment shall be notified of any final action taken on any complaint filed by him thereunder.

"(c) Within thirty days of receipt of notice given under subsection (b), the employee or applicant for employment, if aggrieved by the final disposition of his complaint, may file a civil action as provided in section 715, in which civil action the head of the executive department or agency, or the District of Columbia, as appropriate, shall be the respondent.

"(d) The provisions of section 715 shall govern civil actions brought hereunder.

"(e) All functions of the Civil Service Commission

which the Director of the Bureau of the Budget determines relate to nondiscrimination in government employment are transferred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

"(f) All authority, functions, and responsibilities vested in the Secretary of Labor pursuant to Executive Order 11246 relating to nondiscrimination in employment by Government contractors and subcontractors and nondiscrimination in federally assisted construction contracts are transferred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, together with such personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred to the Commission hereby as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions pursuant to this subsection, and the Commission shall hereafter carry out all such authority, functions, and responsibilities pursuant to such order.

"EFFECT UPON OTHER LAW

"SEC. 718. Nothing contained in this Act shall relieve any Government agency or official of its or his primary responsibility to assure nondiscrimination in employment as required by the Constitution, statutes, and Executive orders."

SEC. 12. New section 717, added by section 11 of this Act, shall become effective six months after the date of enactment of this Act.

JUNE 2, 1971

Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

A BILL

To further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act".

SEC. 2. Section 701 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e) is amended as follows:

(a) Effective one year after the date of enactment of this Act, strike "twenty-five" wherever it appears therein and insert in lieu thereof "eight".

(b) In subsection (a) insert "governments, governmental agencies, political subdivisions," after "individuals,".

(c) In subsection (b) strike out "a State or political subdivision thereof" and insert in lieu thereof "the District of Columbia".

(d) In subsection (c) strike out "or an agency of a State or political subdivision of a State,".

(e) At the end of subsection (h) insert before the period a comma and the following: "and further includes any governmental industry, business, or activity".

SEC. 3. Section 702 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–1) is amended by striking out "or to an educational institution with respect to the employment of individuals to perform work connected with the educational activities of such institution".

SEC. 4. Section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (89 Stat. 259; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"PREVENTION OF UNLAWFUL EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

"SEC. 706. (a) The Commission is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unlawful employment practice as set forth in section 703 or 704 of this title.

"(b) Whenever a charge is filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved, or by a member of the Commission, alleging that an employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall serve a copy of the charge on such employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') and shall make an investigation thereof. Charges shall be in writing and shall contain such information and be in such form as the Commission requires. Charges shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is no reason to believe that the charge is true, it shall dismiss the charge and promptly notify the person claiming to be aggrieved and the respondent of its action. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such informal endeavors may be made public by the Commission, its officers or employees, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding without the written consent of the persons concerned. Any person who makes public information in violation of this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. The Commission shall make its determination on reasonable cause as promptly as possible and, as far as practicable, not later than one hundred and twenty days from the filing of the charge or, where applicable under subsection (c) or (d), from the date upon which the Commission is authorized to take action with respect to the charge.

"(c) In the case of a charge filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State, or political subdivision of a State, which has a State or local law prohibiting the unlawful employment practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, the Commission shall take no action with respect to the investigation of such charge before the expiration of sixty days after proceedings have been commenced under the State or local law: Provided, That such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effective date of such State or local law. If any requirement for the commencement of such proceedings is imposed by a State or local authority other than a requirement of the filing of a written and signed statement of the facts upon which the proceeding is based, the proceeding shall be deemed to have been commenced for the purposes of this subsection at the time such statement is sent by certified mail to the appropriate State or local authority.

"(d) In the case of any charge filed by a member of the Commission alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State or political subdivision of a State which has a State or local law prohibiting the practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof the Commission shall, before taking any action with respect to such charge, notify the appropriate State or local officials and, upon request, afford them a reasonable time, but not less than sixty days: Provided, That such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effective date of such State or local law, unless a shorter period is requested, to act under such State or local law to remedy the practice alleged.

with respect to which the person aggrieved has initially instituted proceedings with a State or local agency with authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, such charge shall be filed by the person aggrieved within three hundred days after the alleged unlawful employment practive occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency.

"(f) If the Commission determines after attempting to secure voluntary compliance under subsection (b) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved, which determination shall not be reviewable in any court, the Commission shall issue and cause to be served upon the respondent a complaint stating the facts upon which the allegation of the unlawful employment practice is based, together with a notice of hearing before the Commission, or a member or agent thereof, at a place therein fixed not less than five days after the serving of such complaint. Related proceedings may be consolidated for hearing. Any member of the Commission who filed a charge in any case

"(g) A respondent shall have the right to file an answer to the complaint against him and with the leave of the Commission, which shall be granted whenever it is reasonable and fair to do so, may amend his answer at any time. Respondents and the person aggrieved shall be parties and may appear at any stage of the proceedings, with or without counsel. The Commission may grant such other persons a right to intervene or to file briefs or make oral arguments as amicus curiae or for other purposes, as it considers appropriate. All testimony shall be taken under oath and shall be reduced to writing.

"(h) If the Commission finds that the respondent has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons aggrieved by such unlawful employment practice an order requiring the respondent to cease and desist from such unlawful employment practice and to take such affirmative action, including reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice), as will effectuate the policies of this title: Provided, That interim earnings

or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the aggrieved person or persons shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. Such order may further require such respondent to make reports from time to time showing the extent to which he has complied with the order. If the Commission finds that the respondent has not engaged in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons alleged in the complaint to be aggrieved an order dismissing the complaint.

"(i) After a charge has been filed and until the record has been filed in court as hereinafter provided, the proceeding may at any time be ended by agreement between the Commission and the parties for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment practice, approved by the Commission, and the Commission may at any time, upon reasonable notice, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it. An agreement approved by the Commission shall be enforceable under subsection (k) and the provisions of that subsection shall be applicable to the extent appropriate to a proceeding to enforce an agreement.

"(k) The Commission may petition any United States court of appeals within any circuit wherein the unlawful employment practice in question occurred or wherein the respondent resides or transacts business for the enforcement of its order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, and shall file in the court the record in the proceedings as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon such filing, the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon the parties to the proceeding before the Commission, and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein and shall have power to grant such temporary relief, restraining order, or other order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Commission. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its member, or agent, shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon the filing of the record with it the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

"(l) Any party aggrieved by a final order of the Commission granting or denying, in whole or in part, the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in any United States court of appeals in the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question is alleged to have occurred or in which such party resides or transacts business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission (and to the other parties to the proceeding before the Commission) and thereupon the Commission shall file in the court the certified record in the proceeding as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall proceed in the same manner as in the case of an application by the Commission under subsection (k), the findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive, and the court shall have the same jurisdiction to grant such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and in like manner to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Commission. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection or subsection (k) shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order of the Commission.

"(m) The provisions of the Act entitled 'An Act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes', approved March 23, 1932 (47 Stat. 70 et seq.; 29 U.S.C.

101–115), shall not apply with respect to (1) proceedings under subsection (k), (l), or (o) of this section, (2) proceedings under section 707 of this title, or (3) proceedings under section 715 of this title.

"(n) The Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by the General Counsel of the Commission.

"(o) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve the power of the Commission to grant effective relief in the proceeding the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending its final disposition of such charge, in the United States district court for any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful employment practice concerned is alleged to have been committed, or the judicial district in which the aggrieved person would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful employment practice, but, if the respondent is not found within any such judicial district, such an action may be brought in the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28, United States Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in all cases be considered a judicial district in which such an action might have been brought. Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such injunctive relief or temporary restraining order as it deems just and proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law. Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, except paragraph (a) (2) thereof, shall govern proceedings under this subsection."

SEC. 5. Section 707 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 261; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–6) is amended by adding the following new subsections:

"(e) Any record or paper required by section 709 (c) of this title to be preserved or maintained shall be made available for inspection, reproducton, and copying by the Commission, the Attorney General, or his representative, upon demand in writing directed to the person having custody, possession, or control of such record or paper. Unless otherwise ordered by a court of the United States, neither the Commission, the Attorney General, nor his representative shall disclose any record or paper produced pursuant to this title, or any reproduction or copy, except to Congress or any committee thereof, or to a governmental agency, or in the presentation of any case or proceeding before any court or grand jury. The United States district court for the district in which a demand is made or in which a record or paper so demanded is located, shall have jurisdiction to compel by appropriate process the production of such record or paper.

"(d) Effective on the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act, the functions of the Attorney General and the Acting Attorney General, as the case may be, under this section shall be transferred to the Commission, together with such personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available, or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred to the Commission hereby as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions pursuant to this subsection, and the Commission shall thereafter carry out such functions in the manner set forth in subsections (e) and (f) of this section.

"(e) In all suits commenced pursuant to this section prior to the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, proceedings shall continue without abatement, all court orders and decrees shall remain in effect, and the Commission shall be substituted as a party for the United States of America or the

Attorney General or Acting Attorney General, as appropriate.

"(f) Subsequent to the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, the Commission shall have authority to investigate and act on a charge of a pattern or practice of discrimination, whether filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved or by a member of the Commission: Provided, That all such actions shall be in accordance with the procedures set forth in section 706, including the provisions for enforcement and appellate review contained in subsections (k), (l), (m), and (n) thereof."

SEC. 6. Section 709 (b), (c), and (d) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 263; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–8 (b)–(d)) are amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Commission may cooperate with State and local agencies charged with the administration of State fair employment practices laws and, with the consent of such agencies, may, for the purpose of carrying out its functions and duties under this title and within the limitation of funds appropriated specifically for such purpose, engage in and contribute to the cost of research and other projects of mutual interest undertaken by such agencies, and utilize the services of such agencies and their employees and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, may pay by advance or reimbursement such agencies and their employees for services rendered to assist the Commission in carrying out this title. In furtherance of such cooperative efforts, the Commission may enter into written agreements with such State or local agencies and such agreements may include provisions under which the Commission shall refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases specified in such agreements or under which the Commission shall relieve any person or class of persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed under this section. The Commission shall rescind any such agreement whenever it determines that the agreement no longer serves the interest of effective enforcement of this title.

"(c) Every employer, employment agency, and labor organization subject to this title shall (1) make and keep such records relevant to the determinations of whether unlawful employment practices have been or are being committed, (2) preserve such records for such periods, and (3) make such reports therefrom as the Commission shall prescribe by regulation or order, after public hearing, as reasonable, necessary, or appropriate for the enforcement of this title or the regulation or orders thereunder. The Commission shall, by regulations, require each employer, labor organization, and joint labor-management committee subject to this title which controls an apprenticeship or other training program to maintain such records as are reasonably necessary to carry out the purpose of this title, including, but not limited to, a list of applicants who wish to participate in such program, including the chronological order in which such applicants were received, and to furnish to the Commission upon request, a detailed description of the manner in which persons are selected to participate in the apprenticeship or other training program. Any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee which believes that the application to it of any regulation or order issued under this section would result in undue hardship may apply to the Commission for an exemption from the application of such regulation or order, and, if such application for an exemption is denied, bring a civil action in the United States district court for the district where such records are kept. If the Commission or the court, as the case may be, finds that the application of the regulation or order to the employer, employment agency, or labor organization in question would impose an undue hardship, the Commission or the court, as the case may be, may grant appropriate relief. If any person required to comply with the provisions of this subsection fails or refuses to do so, the United States district court for the district in which such person is found, resides or transacts business, shall, upon application of the Commission,

"(d) In prescribing requirements pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, the Commission shall consult with other interested State and Federal agencies and shall endeavor to coordinate its requirements with those adopted by such agencies. The Commission shall furnish, upon request and without cost to any State or local agency charged with the administration of a fair employment practice law, information obtained pursuant to subsection (c) of this section from any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee subject to the jurisdiction of such agency. Such information shall be furnished on condition that it not be made public by the recipient agency prior to the institution of a proceeding under State or local law involving such information. If this condition is violated by a recipient agency, the Commission may decline to honor subsequent requests pursuant to this subsection."

SEC. 7. Section 710 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 264; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–9) is amended to read as follows:

"INVESTIGATORY POWERS

"SEC. 710. For the purpose of all hearings and investigations conducted by the Commission or its duly authorized agents or agencies, section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (49 Stat. 455; 29 U.S.C. 161) shall apply: Provided, That no subpena shall be issued on the application of any party to proceedings before the Commission until after the Commission has issued and caused to be served upon the respondent a complaint and notice of hearing under subsection (f) of section 706."

SEC. 8. (a) Section 703 (a) (2) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 255; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–2 (a) (2)) is amended by inserting the words "or applicants for employment" after the words "his employees".

(b) Section 703 (c) (2) of such Act (78 Stat. 255; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–2 (c) (2)) is amended by inserting the words "or applicants for membership" after the word "membership".

(c) Section 703 (h) of such Act (78 Stat. 257; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–2 (h)) is amended by striking out "to give and to act upon the results of any professionally developed ability test provided that such test, its administration or action upon the results is not designed, intended, or used to discriminate because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "to give and to act upon the results of any professionally developed ability test which is directly related to the determination of bona fide occupational qualifications reasonably necessary to perform the normal duties of the particular position concerned: Provided, That such test, its administration, or action upon the results is not designed, intended, or used to discriminate because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin."

(2) Section 704(b) of such Act is amended by (A) striking out "or employment agency" and inserting in lieu thereof "employment agency, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs,", and (B) inserting a comma and the words "or relating to admission to, or employment in, any program established to provide apprenticeship or other training by such a joint labor-management committee" before the word "indicating".

(e) (1) The second sentence of section 705(a) (78 Stat. 258; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–4(a)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "and all members of the Commission shall continue to serve until their successors are appointed and qualified: Provided, That no such member of the Commission shall continue to serve (1) for more than sixty days when the Congress is in session unless a nomination to fill such vacancy shall have been submitted to the Senate, or (2) after the adjournment sine die of the session of the Senate in which such nomination was submitted".

(2) The fourth sentence of section 705 (a) of such Act is amended to read as follows: "The Chairman shall be responsible on behalf of the Commission for the administrative operations of the Commission, and shall appoint, in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, such officers, agents, attorneys, hearing examiners, and employees as he deems necessary to assist it in the performance of its functions and to fix their compensation in accordance with the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates: Provided, That assignment, removal, and compensation of hearing examiners shall be in accordance with sections 3105, 3344, 5362, and 7521 of title 5, United States Code."

(f) Section 705 (g) (1) of such Act (78 Stat. 258; 42 U.S.C. 2000e-4 (g) (1)) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: "and to accept voluntary and uncompensated services, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3679 (b) of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 665 (b))".

(g) Section 705 (g) (6) of such Act (78 Stat. 259;

(b) Section 713 of such Act (78 Stat. 265; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–12) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c) Except for the powers granted to the Commission under subsection (h) of section 706, the power to modify or set aside its findings, or make new findings, under subsections (i) and (k) of section 706, the rulemaking power as defined in subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, with reference to general rules as distinguished from rules of specific applicability, and the power to enter into or rescind agreements with State and local agencies, as provided in subsection (b) of section 709, under which the Commission agrees to refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases or under which the Commission agrees to relieve any person or class of persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed by section 709, the Commission may delegate any of its functions, duties, and powers to such person or persons as the Commission may designate by regulation, including functions, duties, and powers with respect to investigating, conciliating, hearing, determining, ordering, certifying, reporting, or otherwise acting as to any work, business, or matter: Provided, That nothing in this subsection authorizes the Commission to provide for persons other than those referred to in clauses (2) and (3) of subsection (b) of section 556 of title 5 of the United States Code to conduct any hearing to which that section applies.

"(d) The Commission is authorized to delegate to any group of three or more members of the Commission any or all of the powers which it may itself exercise."

(i) Section 714 of such Act (78 Stat. 265; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–13) is amended by striking out "section 111" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 111 and 1114".

(j) Section 715 of such Act (78 Stat. 265; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–14) is amended to read as follows:

"CIVIL ACTIONS BY PERSONS AGGRIEVED

"SEC. 715. (a) If (1) the Commission determines that there is no reasonable cause to believe the charge is true and dismisses the charge in accordance with section 706(b), (2) finds no probable jurisdiction and dismisses the charge, or (3) within one hundred and eighty days after a charge is filed with the Commission, or within one hundred and eighty days after expiration of any period of reference under section 706 (c) or (d), the Commission has not either (i) issued a complaint in accordance with section 706(f), (ii) determined that there is not reasonable cause to believe the charge is true and dismissed the charge in accordance with section 706(b) or found no probable jurisdiction and dismissed the charge, or (iii) entered into a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved in accordance with section 706(f) or an agreement with the parties in accordance with section 706(i), the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and within sixty days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Commission to intervene in such civil action if it certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon the commencement of such civil action, the Commission shall be divested of jurisdiction over the proceeding and shall take no further action with respect thereto: Provided, That, upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (c) or (d) or the efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance.

"(b) Each United States district court and each United States court of a place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of actions brought under this section. Such an action may be brought in any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful employment practice is alleged to have been committed, or in the judicial district in which the plaintiff would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful employment practice, but if the respondent is not found within any such district, such an action may be brought within the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28 of the United States Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in all cases be considered a district in which the action might have been brought. Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper.

"(c) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice). Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. No order of the court shall require the admission or reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union or the hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any backpay, if such individual was refused admission, suspended, or expelled or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin or in violation of section 704 (a).

"(d) In any case in which an employer, employment agency, or labor organization fails to comply with an order of a court issued in a civil action brought under subsection (a), the Commission may commence proceedings to compel compliance with such order.

"(e) Any civil action brought under subsection (a) and any proceedings brought under subsection (d) shall be subject to appeal as provided in sections 1291 and 1292 title 28, United States Code.

"(f) In any action or proceeding under this section, the court, in its discretion, may allow the prevailing plaintiff a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs."

SEC. 9. (a) Section 5314 of title 5 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(55) Chairman, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission."

(b) Clause (72) of section 5315 of such title is amended to read as follows:

"(72) Members, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (4)."

(c) Clause (111) of section 5316 of such title is repealed.

SEC. 10. Sections 706 and 710 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended by this Act, shall not be applicable to charges filed with the Commission prior to the effective date of this Act.

SEC. 11. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"NONDISCRIMINATION IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 717. (a) All personnel actions affecting employees or applicants for employment in the competitive service (as defined in section 2102 of title 5 of the United States Code) or employees or applicants for employment in positions with the District of Columbia government covered by the Civil Service Retirement Act shall be made free from any discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

"(b) The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission shall have authority to enforce the provision of subsection (a) and shall issue such rules, regulations, orders, and instructions as it deems necessary and appropriate to carry out its responsibilities hereunder, and the head of each executive department and agency and the appropriate officers of the District of Columbia shall comply with such rules, regulations, orders, and instructions: Provided, That such rules and regulations shall provide that an employee or applicant for employment shall be notified of any final action taken on any complaint filed by him thereunder.

"(c) Within thirty days of receipt of notice given under subsection (b), the employee or applicant for employment, if aggrieved by the final disposition of his complaint, may file a civil action as provided in section 715, in which civil action the head of the executive department or agency, or the District of Columbia, as appropriate, shall be the respondent.

"(d) The provisions of section 715 shall govern civil actions brought hereunder.

"(e) All functions of the Civil Service Commission

which the Director of the Bureau of the Budget determines relate to nondiscrimination in government employment are transferred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

"(f) All authority, functions, and responsibilities vested in the Secretary of Labor pursuant to Executive Order 11246 relating to nondiscrimination in employment by Government contractors and subcontractors and nondiscrimination in federally assisted construction contracts are transferred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, together with such personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred to the Commission hereby as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions pursuant to this subsection, and the Commission shall hereafter carry out all such authority, functions, and responsibilities pursuant to such order.

"SEC. 718. Nothing contained in this Act shall relieve any Government agency or official of its or his primary responsibility to assure nondiscrimination in employment as required by the Constitution, statutes, and Executive orders."

SEC. 12. New section 717, added by section 11 of this Act, shall become effective six months after the date of enactment of this Act.

1st Session } { No. 92-238

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

JUNE 2, 1971.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

Mr. HAWKINS, from the Committee on Education and Labor, submitted the following REPORT

together with

MINORITY AND SEPARATE VIEWS

[To accompany H.R. 1746]

The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 1746) to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE OF LEGISLATION

The basic purpose of H.R. 1746 is to grant the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission authority to issue, through well established procedures, judicially enforceable cease and desist orders. The bill would transfer the functions and responsibilities of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance (now in the Department of Labor—pursuant to Executive Order 11246) to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; and transfer the Attorney General's authority in practice or pattern discrimination suits to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The bill would broaden jurisdictional coverage by deleting the existing exemptions of State and local government employees and of certain employees connected with educational institutions. The bill would extend some protection to Federal employees. One year after enactment, coverage is extended to employers and labor unions with eight or more employees or members, a reduction from the present requirement of 25 employees or members.

BACKGROUND OF LEGISLATION

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission was established under the authority of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Under that authority the Commission is not given the power to issue judicially enforceable orders but is limited essentially to the function of conciliation. In 1965 the Committee recommended passage of a bill supporting cease and desist authority. That bill (H.R. 10065) was acted on favorably in the House of Representatives but was not taken up by the Senate.

In the 91st Congress the Senate succeeded in passing S. 2453, a bill granting the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission self-enforcing cease and desist authority. This Committee, during the second half of the 91st Congress, favorably reported H.R. 17555, identical, with two exceptions, to H.R. 1746. Neither S. 2453 nor H.R. 17555 reached the House floor for debate.

Provisions in H.R. 1746 not found in H.R. 17555 relate to the transfer of the functions and responsibilities of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance (pursuant to Executive Order 11246) to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; and the transfer of the Attorney General's authority in "pattern or practice" discrimination suits to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Time and experience have re-enforced this Committee's strongly held view of the necessity of establishing the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission as a quasi-judicial agency with authority to obtain enforcement of orders. H.R. 1746 is an effort to implement in a meaningful way the national policy of equal employment opportunity for employees without discrimination because of race, color, religion, national origin, or sex.

SUBCOMMITTEE HEARINGS

The General Subcommittee on Labor held six days of public hearings on H.R. 17555 and related bills during the 91st Congress. The principal witnesses were: Honorable William H. Brown, III, Chairman, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; Deputy Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst; a panel representing the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, headed by Clarence Mitchell, Washington Bureau, NAACP, including Thomas C. Harris, Associate Counsel, AFL–CIO; former Commission Chairman Clifford L. Alexander, Jr.; and Irving Kator, Director, Federal Equal Employment Opportunity, U.S. Civil Service Commission.

The subcommittee held hearings on H.R. 1746 on March 3, 4, and 18, 1971. These hearings were primarily concerned with the transfer of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance and the transfer of the Attorney General's practice or pattern discrimination authority to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Witnesses, however, were free to and did submit statements and discuss other significant aspects of the proposed legislation. The principal witnesses were: Deputy Assistant Attorney General David L. Norman; Under Secretary of Labor Laurence Silberman; Assistant Secretary of Labor Arthur Fletcher; OFCC Director John Wilks; Commission Chairman

William H. Brown, III; Howard Glickstein, Staff Director, U.S. Commission on Civil Rights; U.S. Representative Shirley Chisholm; U.S. Representative Bella Abzug; Thomas C. Harris, Associate General Counsel, AFL–CIO; Clarence Mitchell, NAACP; Irving Kator, Assistant Executive Director, U.S. Civil Service Commission; Don White, American Retail Federation; Lucille Shriver, National Federation of Business and Professional Woman; Robert Nystrom, Motorola, Inc.; and Warren Anderson, The Black Committee, Maywood, Illinois.

The subcommittee concluded its consideration of the bill in executive session on April 7, 1971, voting to report the bill to the full Committee without amendment. The Committee on Education and Labor ordered H.R. 1746 by a rollcall vote of 21 to 12 on May 4, 1971.

NEED FOR THE BILL

A little more than 6 years ago, Congress enacted Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Public Law 88–352, 42 U.S.C. 2000(e)–2000(e–15). That act recognized the prevalence of discriminatory employment practices in the United States and the need for Federal legislation to deal with the problem. Title VII of that Act, created the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission which became effective July 2, 1965. In the intervening 6 years, the Commission made an heroic effort to reduce discrimination in employment which was found to pervade our system.

Despite the commitment of Congress to the goal of equal employment opportunity for all our citizens, the machinery created by the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is not adequate.

Despite the progress which has been made since passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, discrimination against minorities and women continues. The persistence of discrimination, and its detrimental effects require a reaffirmation of our national policy of equal opportunity in employment. It is essential that seven years after the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, effective enforcement procedures be provided the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to strengthen its efforts to reduce discrimination in employment.

An examination of the statistics with respect to the progress of equal employment opportunities clearly shows that the voluntary approach currently applied has failed to eliminate employment discrimination. During the first 5 years of its existence, the Commission has received more than 52,000 charges. Of these, 35,445 were recommended for investigation. Of this number approximately 56% involved complaints of discrimination because of race, 23% discrimination on sex, and the remainder involved charges of discrimination because of national origin or religion.

The number of charges is increasing. The incidence of discrimination does not appear to be waning. In Fiscal Year 1969, the Commission received 12,148 charges; in Fiscal Year 1970, the Commission received 14,129 charges. In testimony before this Committee, William H. Brown, III, Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, stated that during the first seven and a half months of the current fiscal year, the Commission has received 14,644 charges, a greater number than the total charges received for all of last year.

With the steady growth in the number of cases filed with the Commission, an effective and suitable procedure and remedy become increasingly important. Effective remedies have not resulted from present practice. Of the 35,445 charges that were recommended for investigation, reasonable cause was found in over 63% of the cases, but in less than half of these cases was the Commission able to achieve a totally or even partially successful conciliation.

There is nothing that would lead anyone to expect that with the limited authority currently available to it the Commission might produce any higher degree of compliance in the future. With the increasing number of complaints it now receives, and in the absence of adequate cease and desist enforcement procedures, the Commission can only be expected to catalog an increasing number of complaints for which there is no reasonable expectation of an adequate remedy.

The impact of the Commission's inability to obtain relief from employment discrimination is reflected in an examination of statistics showing the distribution of minorities in occupational groups. While the tables show some improvement since 1964, minority groups are not obtaining their rightful place in our society.

PERCENT DISTRIBUTION OF TOTAL WORK FORCE BY OCCUPATIONAL GROUPS

Occupation	Nonwhites employed			White employed
	1964	1969	1970	1969	1970
Professional technician	6.7	8.3	9.1	14.5	14.8
Farmer, farm manager	1.9	1.0	1.0	2.5	2.4
Managers, proprietors	2.6	3.0	3.5	11.1	11.4
Clerical	7.6	12.9	13.2	17.7	18.0
Sales	1.8	2.0	2.1	6.5	6.7
Craftsmen	7.0	8.5	8.2	13.6	13.5
Operatives	20.3	23.9	23.7	17.8	17.0
Private household	13.6	8.5	7.7	1.3	1.3
Service workers	18.7	18.2	18.3	9.2	9.4
Farmworkers	6.8	3.2	2.9	1.7	1.6
Laborers (nonfarm)	13.0	10.5	10.3	4.0	4.1

The situation of the working women is no less serious. Women currently comprise approximately 38% of the total work force of the Nation. There are approximately 30 million employed women.

Recent statistics released from the U.S. Department of Labor indicate that there exists a profound economic discrimination against women workers. Ten years ago, women made 60.8% of the average salaries made by men in the same year; in 1968, women's earnings still only represented 58.2% of the salaries made by men in that year. Similarly, in that same year, 60% of women, but only 20% of men earned less than $5,000. At the other end of the scale, only 3% of women, but 28% of men had earnings of $10,000 or more.

Women are subject to economic deprivation as a class. Their self-fulfillment and development is frustrated because of their sex. Numerous studies have shown that women are placed in the less challenging, the less responsible and the less remunerative positions on the basis of their sex alone.

Such blatantly disparate treatment is particularly objectionable in view of the fact that Title VII has specifically prohibited sex discrimination since its enactment in 1964. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has progressively involved itself in the problems posed by sex discrimination, but its efforts here, as in the area of racial discrimination, have been ineffective due directly to its inability to enforce its findings.

In recent years, the courts have done much to create a body of law clearly disapproving of sex discrimination in employment.[1] Despite the efforts of the courts and the Commission, discrimination against women continues to be widespread, and is regarded by many as either morally or physiologically justifiable.

This Committee believes that women's rights are not judicial divertissements. Discrimination against women is no less serious than other forms of prohibited employment practices and is to be accorded the same degree of social concern given to any type of unlawful discrimination.

Enactment of this bill will not automatically end employment discrimination in this country. The bill offers no panaceas or guarantees of success. The experiences of the last 6 years under Title VII, while in many respects reflecting major advancements in securing equal opportunity for all Americans, nonetheless are disappointing in terms of what minorities and women in this country have a right to expect.

The time has come to bring an end to job discrimination once and for all, and to insure every citizen the opportunity for the decent self-respect that accompanies a job commensurate with one's abilities. The hopeful prospects that Title VII offered millions of Americans in 1964 must be revived.

Estimate of Costs

In an effort to secure an accurate estimate of the projected costs of this legislation to satisfy the requirements of clause 7 of rule XIII the General Subcommittee on Labor, through its chairman, the Honorable John H. Dent, sought the views of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The response of the Commission to that inquiry is contained in the following letter:

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission,
Washington, D.C., April 22, 1971.

Hon. John H. Dent,
Chairman, General Subcommittee on Labor, Committee on Education and Labor, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Chairman: Thank you for your letter of March 26, 1971, requesting this Commission, pursuant to Rule XIII, clause 7 of the Rules of the House of Representatives, to submit to the Subcommittee estimated costs for carrying out the provisions of H.R. 1746. I have set out below our cost projections with respect to H.R. 1746, based upon available data and workload approximations for FY 1971 through FY 1976.

It is the Commission's view that the accompanying figures represent a reasonable estimate of minimum additional budgetary requirements for administration of the three new areas of the application of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 heretofore not discharged by any Federal agency:

Ct. ———, 3 FEP Cases 40 (S. Ct. 1971); Diaz v. Pan American, ——— F. 2d ———, 3 EPD 8166 (C.A. 5, 1971) and cases cited therein.

COST PROJECTIONS FOR H.R. 1746

[Figures in thousands]

	Fiscal year—
	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975	1976
Cease and desist operations	501	9,431	11,912	12,081	12,123	12,151
Federal, State, county, and municipal jurisdiction		2,600	3,900	3,900	3,900	3,900
Extended jurisdiction to 8 or more employees		685	4,034	4,213	4,223	4,243
Total	501	12,716	19,846	20,194	20,246	20,294

In preparing the above figures, several assumptions have been made which are, I feel, extremely important for consideration of these projections. In the first instance, despite the Commission's desire to commence operations under its own enforcement powers, it is unlikely that any of the operations proposed in H.R. 1746 could be implemented in any significant manner in FY 1971. It will be necessary to develop administrative procedures to implement the bill, and this will require some time. For example, the writing and approval of rules to establish operating procedures and personnel recruitment to meet the additional operational requirements in H.R. 1746 will require several months. It is, therefore, realistic to assume that implementation of the cease and desist operations as well as the other aspects of enforcement contained in the bill would not begin until FY 1972, and that the first full year of operation would not be until FY 1973. Accordingly, the cost projections for FY 1971, and also for FY 1972, based upon a full year's operation as requested by the Subcommittee, are hypothetical, insofar as they assume that operations under H.R. 1746 will begin immediately upon its passage.

The cost projections for the cease and desist operations as proposed by H.R. 1746 have been derived from Commission caseload projections. Using these figures as a base, the staffing requirements for implementation of the hearing procedures encompassed by the cease and desist powers have been projected on the basis of an adjudication of 15 cases per year for each hearing examiner and the preparation and presentation of 20 cases per year for each trial attorney. From these figures, allowances have also been made for a minimum of supporting staff and expenses which will be involved in maintaining the hearing process. It is difficult for me to say at this time whether the cease and desist cost projections contained herein are accurate. The assumptions regarding the number of cases that a hearing examiner and a trial attorney will handle per year are based upon approximations of the average length of an adjudication of a Title VII violation based upon the estimated degree of complexity involved in such cases. It may well evolve that these approximations are not realistic; the estimates that each hearing examiner will be able to hear 15 cases per year and that each trial attorney can prepare 20 cases per year are derived from NLRB experience and may not hold true for Title VII litigation.

The extension of Title VII jurisdiction to include Federal, State, county and municipal employees will bring an additional 12,880,000 employees within the provisions of the Act. As there is currently no uniform Federal law which applies in this area, it is difficult to project, with any degree of accuracy, the impact of this extension of jurisdiction. However, due to the large number of employees which this will bring within the provisions of the Act, it can be safely assumed that this new availability of a Federal administrative forum, where none has been available, will generate a substantial number of complaints. The figures projected in the table above for this area of enforcement have been derived from existant Civil Service Commission estimates regarding Federal EEO complaint adjudication and upon an approximation, based upon the number of employees involved, for enforcement of complaints against State and local agencies.

The figures projected for the extension of Title VII jurisdiction to include all persons employed in establishments which employ eight or more full time employees have been derived from a projected 25% increase in the Commission's workload due to the extended coverage. The cost projections for this extended jurisdiction for FY 1972 assume that the jurisdictional expansion will only operate for the last few months of that year and will not be operational in FY 1971 as H.R. 1746 provides that this power will not become effective until one year after the Act is passed. Similarly, the cost projection for the extended jurisdiction to Federal, State, county and municipal employees in FY 1972 is based upon less than a full year's operation, as the Act provides for a six-month's delay in instituting this function.

The other two areas of enforcement to be assigned to the Commission by H.R. 1746, transfer of OFCC functions and enforcement of pattern or practice suits, are currently administered by other Federal agencies, and do not, therefore, represent areas of Federal enforcement where new funds will be needed. As regards both the transfer of OFCC functions and the enforcement of pattern or practice suits by the EEOC, H.R. 1746 specifically provides that the functions of the respective agency currently administering these operations, together with "such personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available, or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred . . ." (emphasis added) shall be transferred to the Commission. Accordingly, in projecting requirements for these operations, the Commission restricted its projections to using only the appropriation requirements proposed by these agencies, as set forth below:

[In thousands]

	Fiscal year—
	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975	1976
OFCC functions	262	2,594	2,600	2,600	2,600	2,600
Pattern or practice enforcement	300	1,800	1,800	1,800	1,800	1,800

Once the above referenced operations have been transferred to the Commission, however, it may subsequently be necessary to modify these figures, dependent upon any change in the enforcement patterns which may become apparent after the consolidation of the enforcement of employment discrimination as proposed by H.R. 1746.

If I can be of any further assistance to you on this matter, please feel free to call on me.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM H. BROWN, III.

The estimate by the General Subcommittee on Labor of the costs of implementing H.R. 1746 vary somewhat from the views of the Commission and are contained in the following chart:

ESTIMATE BY THE GENERAL SUBCOMMITTEE ON LABOR OF THE COST OF IMPLEMENTING H.R. 1746

Extension of jurisdiction to 8 or more employees		3,034	3,213	3,223	3,223	4,243

It will be noted that the subcommittee estimates, in most cases, are lower than those of the Commission. With all due respect to the Commission, it is felt that staff recruitment and preparation of applicable implementing rules and regulations will require more time than anticipated by the Commission. Further, the mere existence of a law with enforcement authority will be a deterring factor; therefore it is highly speculative how many new cases will arise as a result of the extension of coverage. The subcommittee does not anticipate any significant costs based on this factor; though a large number of small employers would be covered. Also, the law would not usurp the State agencies, and undoubtedly a large number of cases would still be settled at the State level.

The transfer of functions from OFCC, CSC, and Justice, will not require additional Federal expenditures because the transfers will also involve the conveyance of "unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available, or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred . . ."

Major Provisions of the Bill

CEASE AND DESIST ENFORCEMENT POWERS

During the preparation and presentation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, employment discrimination tended to be viewed as a series of isolated and distinguishable events, due, for the most part, to ill-will on the part of some identifiable individual or organization. It was thought that a scheme which stressed conciliation rather than compulsory processes would be more appropriate for the resolution of this essentially "human" problem. Litigation, it was thought, would be necessary only on an occasional basis in the event of determined recalcitrance. Experience, however, has shown this to be an oversimplified expectation, incorrect in its conclusions.

Employment discrimination, as we know today, is a far more complex and pervasive phenomenon. Experts familiar with the subject generally describe the problem in terms of "systems" and "effects" rather than simply intentional wrongs. The literature on the subject is replete with discussions of the mechanics of seniority and lines of progression, perpetuation of the present effects of earlier discriminatory practices through various institutional devices, and testing and validation requirements.[2] The forms and incidents of discrimination which the Commission is required to treat are increasingly complex. Particularly to the untrained observer, their discriminatory nature may not appear obvious at first glance. A recent striking example was provided by the U.S. Supreme Court in its decision in Griggs v. Duke Power Co., —— U.S. ——, 91 S.Ct. 849, 3 FEP Cases 175 (S.Ct. 1971), where the Court held that the use of employment tests as determinants of an applicant's job qualification, even when nondiscriminatory and applied in good faith by the employer, was in violation of Title VII if such tests work a discriminatory effect in hiring patterns and there is no showing of an overriding business necessity for the use of such criteria.

It is increasingly obvious that the entire area of employment discrimination is one whose resolution requires not only expert assistance, but also the technical perception that a problem exists in the first place, and that the system complained of is unlawful.

This kind of expertise normally does not reside in either the personnel or legal arms of employers, and the result in terms of conciliation is often an impasse, with the respondent unwilling or unable to understand the problem in the way the Commission perceives it. As we have already noted, the Commission has been able to achieve successful conciliation in less than half of the cases in which reasonable cause was determined. It has been the emphasis on voluntariness that has proven to be most detrimental to the successful operation of Title VII. In cases posing the most profound consequences, respondents have more often than not shrugged off the Commission's entreaties and relied upon the unlikelihood of the parties suing them.

Facts, statistical evidence and experience demonstrate that employers, labor organizations, employment agencies and joint labor-management committees continue to engage in conduct which contravenes the provisions of Title VII. The existence of such practices demonstrates the immediate need to effectuate the purposes of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

H.R. 1746 remedies the failure to include effective enforcement powers in Title VII by enacting a new section 706 (section 4 of the bill) which empowers the Commission, after it has exhausted the procedures for achieving voluntary compliance, to issue complaints and hold hearings, to issue cease and desist orders against discriminatory practices, and to seek enforcement of its orders in the Federal Courts. Comparable powers are now exercised by most Federal regulatory agencies, the Federal Communications Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and the National Labor Relations Board, to name a few, as well as the vast majority of State Fair Employment Practice Commissions. By providing this expansion of Title VII authority, we will remove present shortcoming of the act and provide a quick and effective remedy against employment discrimination.

Under the new section 706, in the event of a violation of Title VII the Commission would proceed in the following manner:

1. Upon the filing of a charge, the Commission would serve a copy of the charge on the respondent and would investigate. If, after investigation, the Commission decides that there is no reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, it would dismiss the charge and notify both the person claiming to be aggrieved and the respondent (sec. 706 (b)).

2. If the Commission finds reasonable cause, it would seek to eliminate the unlawful practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion (sec. 706(b)). An agreement for the elimination of the alleged unlawful practice may be entered into by the Commission any time between the filing of the charge and until the record is filed with the Court of Appeals (sec. 706(i)).

3. Existing law relating to actions filed under State or local law has been retained. In such cases, the Commission will not assume jurisdiction for sixty days after the commencement of the action under the State or local authority (sec. 706(c)).

4. If the Commission determines that it is unable to secure an acceptable agreement, the Commission will then issue and serve upon the respondent a complaint setting forth the facts upon which the allegation is based and a notice of hearing (sec. 706(f)). The respondent and the party claiming to be aggrieved shall be the primary partie to the proceeding, but the Commission may grant any other persons th right to intervene, file briefs, or appear as amicus curiae (sec. 706(g)).

5. After completion of a hearing, if an unlawful employment prac tice is found to have occurred, the Commission is empowered to issue a order requiring the respondent to cease and desist from continuin such practices. The Commission may also prescribe such relief as th case may require (sec. 706(h)). Hearings conducted pursuant to thi section will be governed by the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C § 551, et. seq.

6. Any person who has been affected by a decision of the Commissio may petition for a review of such order in the appropriate Unite States court of appeals (sec. 706(i)). All litigation to which the Com mission is a party or affecting the Commission, except litigation in th Supreme Court, shall be conducted by the Commission's attorneys litigation in the Supreme Court will be conducted by the Attorney General (sec. 706(n)).

7. Where the Commission feels that, as a result of its preliminary investigation, prompt judicial action is necessary, it may petition the appropriate United States district court for a preliminary injunctio or temporary restraining order, pending its final disposition of the charge (sec. 706(o)).

The Committee has considered various enforcement mechanisms. Ex perience demonstrates that of the enforcement mechanisms available cease-and-desist authority will achieve the fairest and most expedi tious results.[3]

Administrative tribunals are better equipped to handle the com plicated issues involved in employment discrimination cases. In em ployment discrimination litigation the District Courts increasingly have found themselves grappling with difficult problems of discrimina tory practices inherent in employers' basic methods of recruitment hiring, placement or promotions. Issues that have perplexed court include plant-wide restructuring of pay scales and progression lines seniority rosters and testing.

The sorting out of the complexities surrounding employment dis crimination can give rise to enormous expenditure of judicial resource in already heavily overburdened Federal district courts. For example Judge Allgood of the Federal District Court for the Northeastern Dis trict of Alabama, wrote an opinion 157 pages in length in U.S. v. H. K

[3] The committee's view regarding the benefits of cease and desist authority for th Commission has received support from public interest groups. Typical is a letter to th General Subcommittee on Labor, from David A. Brody, Director of the Washington, D.C. office of the Anti Defamation League, stating: "In our view, authority to issue cease and de ist orders after an administrative hearing will be more effective in bringing about compliance with the law than will the court enforcement approach. It is only through the administrative hearing procedure that regulatory agencies are able to handle ex peditiously, and dispose of, the multitude of cases coming before them. The administrative agency is better suited and better geared than the courts for carrying out the public rights which Congress has enacted into law. As the late Justice Frankfurter has stated: 'Unlike courts, which are concerned primarily with the enforcement of private rights although public interests may thereby be implicated, administrative agencies are predominantly concerned with enforcing public rights although private interests may thereby be affected. To no small degree administrative agencies, for the enforcement of public rights were established by Congress, because more flexible and less traditional procedures were called for than those evolved by the courts. It is therefore essential to the vitality of the administrative process that the procedural powers given to these administrative agencies not be confined within the conventional modes by which business is done in courts.' Dissenting opinion, Federal Communications Commission v. National Broadcasting Co Inc., 319 U.S. 239,248 (1943).

Porter, a Title VII suit alleging employment discrimination in a single steel plant. Judge Allgood stated in his opinion that enough use was made of pre-trail discovery in that case to "fill several court files".

Administrative tribunals are better suited to rapid resolution of such complex issues than are Courts. Efficiency and predicability will be enhanced if the necessarily detailed case by case findings of fact and fashioning of remedy is performed by experts in the subject matter. Moreover, administrative tribunals are less subject to technical rules governing such matters as pleadings and motion practice—which afford opportunities for dilatory tactics—and are less constrained by formal rules of evidence—which give rise to a lengthier (and more costly) process of proof.

Further, congested Court calendars necessitate inordinate delays in bringing cases to trial. In fiscal 1970, in the Southern District of New York, the average wait from the time a case was ready for trial until conjury trial was 38 months. In the Eastern District of Louisiana the delay was 24 months. While delays also are encountered in administrative proceedings, the average amount of time from the filing of a charge until the issuance of the trial examiner's decision in an unfair labor practice case before the National Labor Relations Board is less than 7½ months. Approximately 95% of unfair labor practice cases are disposed of without further proceedings beyond this stage.

In addition, past experience with administrative hearings and court enforcement indicates that cease-and-desist would be more effective. Experience has shown that one of the main advantages of granting enforcement power to a regulatory agency is that the existence of the sanction encourages settlement of complaints before the enforcement stage is reached.

The NLRB disposes of approximately 95% of its cases at the administrative level. Information on State fair employment practice commissions indicates this is similarly effective cease-and-desist authority. For example, through 1969, the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission pointed to the fact that while 47 cease-and-desist orders were issued in equal employment cases before the State agency, another 3,838 complaints were processed successfully and adjusted without the need for such order.

Cease and desist authority will assure greater consistency in the development of equal employment law since decisions will be rendered by one agency rather than by several hundred district court judges. The uniformity and predictability of rules and decisions are of significant importance to employers who must look to the Federal Government for guidance in equal employment practices and to individuals who look to the Federal Government for leadership and assurance that employment opportunity exists without regard to race, color, religion, sex or national origin.

PRIVATE ACTIONS

The bill retains the right of an individual to bring a civil suit under the Act in Section 715 (Section 6(j) of the bill). Section 715 provides that if the Commission finds no reasonable cause, fails to make a finding of reasonable cause, or takes no action in respect to a charge, or has not within 180 days issued a complaint nor entered into a conciliation or settlement agreement which is acceptable to the perso aggrieved, it shall notify the person aggrieved. Within 60 days afte such notification the person aggrieved shall then have the right t commence an action under the provisions of the Act against the re spondent in the proper United States district court. Provision for th individual's right to sue is presently contained in Section 706(e) o Title VII. Section 715 in the bill retains this right and extends both th period of Commission action and the time period allowed for filing a action in the appropriate court.

In recent years regulatory agencies have been submerged with in creasing workloads which strain their resources to the breaking point The Commission has stated, in testimony before this committee, tha its caseload has increased even more rapidly than its projections had anticipated. The result of this increasing use of many of the Federa regulatory agencies has frequently affected those agencies' abilities t remain current on all of the matters for which they are responsible This has led to lengthy delays in the administrative process and ha frequently frustrated the remedial role of the agency. In the case o the Commission, the burgeoning workload, accompanied by insufficien funds and a shortage of staff, has, in many instances, forced a party t wait 2 to 3 years before final conciliation procedures can be instituted This situation leads the committee to believe that the private right o action, both under the present Act and in the bill, provides the ag grieved party a means by which he may be able to escape from th administrative quagmire which occasionally surrounds a case caugh in an overloaded administrative process.

In this respect, it is important to note that subsection 715(a) in th bill provides that where the individual has elected to pursue his actio in the court, the court may, in such circumstances as it deems just appoint an attorney for the complainant and authorize the commence ment of the action without the payment of fees, costs or security. By including this provision in the bill, the committee emphasizes that th nature of Title VII actions more often than not pits parties of unequa strength and resources against each other. The complainant, who is usu ally a member of a disadvantaged class, is opposed by an employer wh not infrequently is one of the nation's major producers, and who has a his disposal a vast array of resources and legal talent.

The committee was concerned about the interrelationship betwee the newly created cease and desist enforcement powers of the Com mission and the existing right of private action. It concluded tha duplication of proceedings should be avoided. The bill, therefore contains a provision for termination of Commission jurisdiction onc a private action has been filed (except for the power of the Commis sion to intervene in the private actions). It contains as well a provisio for termination of the right of private action once the Commissio issues a complaint or enters into a conciliation or settlement agreemen which is satisfactory to the Commission and to the person aggrieved If such an agreement is not acceptable to the aggrieved party, hi private right of action is preserved.

The bill provides that an aggrieved person's right to institute private action should be reactivated under certain circumstance where the Commission does not act promptly after issuing a complaint

Section 715(a) provides that an aggrieved person may bring an independent action against the respondent if the Commission has not issued its order within 180 days. The committee believes that aggrieved persons are entitled to have their cases processed promptly and that the Commission should develop its capacity to proceed rapidly to hearing and decision once the complaint is issued. The committee recognizes that it will not be possible to render a decision in all cases within the time limit prescribed. The complexity of many of the charges, and the time required to develop the cases, is well recognized by the committee. It is assumed that individual complainants, who are apprised of the need for the proper preparation of a complex complaint involving multiple issues and extensive discovery procedures, would not cut short the administrative process merely to encounter the same kind of delays in a court proceeding. It would, however, be appropriate for the individual to institute a court action where the delay is occasioned by administrative inefficiencies. The primary concern must be protection of the aggrieved person's option to seek a prompt remedy in the best manner available. It should be noted, however, that it is not the intention of the committee to permit an aggrieved party a chance to retry his case merely because he is dissatisfied with the Commission's action. Once the Commission has issued an order, further proceedings must be in the courts of appeals pursuant to subsection 706(1) of the bill.

"PATTERN OR PRACTICE" SUITS

Section 707 of the act has been amended by transferring the "pattern or practice" suit authority from the Department of Justice to the Commission.

"Pattern or practice" discrimination suits are currently handled in the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice. This Division, established some 15 years ago, and has had its responsibilities greatly increased by virtue of the civil rights legislation enacted in 1964, 1965, and 1968. It has been given authority to prosecute suits in a variety of areas including public accommodations, public facilities, schools, housing, and discrimination in Federally assisted programs. It has also received authority to deal with voting discrimination and to act against persons who interfere with the civil rights of others.

Unfortunately, the size of the Division has not kept pace with its vastly increased responsibilities. As a consequence the Division has been highly selective and very limited in the number and the nature of suits which it has filed. It has been unable to pursue title VII suits with the vigor and intensity needed to reduce the wide-spread prevalence of systemic discrimination. Indeed, for several years it has accorded the lowest priority to employment discrimination cases.

Those selected suits which the Division has been able to bring, however, have contributed significantly to the Federal effort to combat employment discrimination.[4] [4] See e.g. U.S. v. Local 189 United Papermakers & Paperworkers, 282 F. Supp. 39 (E.D. La. 1968), affirmed 416 F. 2d 980 (5th Cir. 1969), cert. denied 397 U.S. 919 (1970); U.S. v. Hayes International Corp., 415 F. 2d 1038, 1045 (5th Cir. 1969); U.S. v. Hayes International Corp., 415 F. 2d 1038, 1045 (5th Cir. 1969); U.S. v. Sheet Metal Workers International Association, Local 36, 416 F. 2d (8th Cir. 1969); U.S. v. Georgia Power Co., 301 F. Supp. 538 (N.D. Ga. 1969).

Unrelenting broad-scale action against patterns or practices of discrimination is, however, critical in combatting employment discrimination. The Committee believes these powers should be exercised by the Commission as an integral and coordinated part of the overall enforcement effort.

Pattern or practice discrimination is a pervasive and deeply imbedded form of discrimination. Specific acts or incidents of discrimination within the Commission's jurisdiction are frequently symptomatic of a pattern or practice which Title VII seeks to eradicate. The Commission has the basic responsibility to achieve the objectives of Title VII. Since the Commission is being vested with cease and desist enforcement authority, it is imperative that it be empowered also to deal with "pattern or practice" discrimination in order to deal comprehensively with systemic discrimination.

The Committee feels that the transfer of the "pattern or practice" jurisdiction to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission would eliminate overlapping jurisdictions and unnecessary duplication of functions. It would promote uniformity in development of law, goals, policies, and procedures and promote economic use of governmental resources. "Pattern or practice" jurisdiction in the Department of Justice was justified at a time when the Commission did not have its own enforcement powers. However, with the acquisition of cease and desist powers, the Commission's operations are sufficiently broad to encompass "pattern or practice" violations as well as individual complaints of discrimination.

The Commission is best able to determine where "pattern or practice" litigation is warranted. It has access to the most current statistical computations and analyses regarding employment patterns and has the most extensive expertise in dealing with employment discrimination.

Most importantly, persons charged with unfair employment practices should not be answerable to several Federal agencies pursuing separate policies. Multifarious remedies cause undue burden and harassment by a multiplicity of simultaneous or successive procedures. An example is the Crown Zellerbach Corp. vs. U.S. (Supra. 5th cir. cuit, 1969) where the union and employer after negotiating a compliance agreement with the Commission were nevertheless subjected to litigation in the Federal court. Next the Office of Federal Contract Compliance entered the picture. Ultimately the Department of Justice filed suit. Such duplication and overlapping proceedings are burdensome and harassing and should be avoided.

TRANSFER OF THE OFFICE OF FEDERAL CONTRACT COMPLIANCE

Approximately one third of the Nation's labor force is employed by government contractors. Not infrequently these employers are the Nation's largest and most prestigious firms. Because of their size and standing in the business community, these employers are leaders in the employment practices of their respective industries. The policies they adopt, therefore, are frequently prototypes for the industry at large.

Section 717(f) of the H.R. 1746 transfers all the authority, functions, and responsibilities of the Secretary of Labor pursuant to Executive Order 11246 relating to contract compliance to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Pursuant to Executive Order 11246, the Secretary of Labor is responsible for the administration of the Federal Government's contract compliance program as prescribed by the executive order. He is responsible for adopting such rules and regulations and issuing such orders as he deems necessary and appropriate to achieve the purposes of the order. The Secretary of Labor through OFCC monitors, coordinates and evaluates the Government-wide contract compliance program and supervises the activities of the 15 Federal contracting agencies which have responsibility for contract compliance in their respective areas.

Despite the increasingly strong Presidential commitment to the goals of equal employment opportunity, despite the strength of the sanctions available to secure this goal, and despite the potential effectiveness of the Federal monitoring mechanisms, the contract compliance program has not been successful.

The Committee believes that the transfer will benefit both the administration of the contract compliance program and the Title VII program. The two programs are addressed to the same basic mission—the elimination of discrimination in employment.

The obligations imposed on the government contractor by the Executive Order would reinforce the obligations imposed by Title VII. The transfer would promote the centralized enforcement of all Federal employment non-discrimination programs. It would reduce administrative overlap and encourage coordination. Clarity, uniformity, and predictability in policy and practice are aided by having the definition of discrimination and the shaping of remedies developed by a single agency. More significantly, it will authorize a single agency with a full complement of enforcement mechanisms that can be coordinated in the attack on employment discrimination.

Studies have shown that current jurisdictional overlap between the Office of Federal Contract Compliance and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission have contributed to confusion, duplication and a general lack of coordination of equal employment opportunity enforcement programs.

Although administrative efforts have been made to coordinate the overlapping legal jurisdictions of the Commission and OFCC, such as the memorandum of understanding agreed to in May 1970, they have not been effective. Each agency has continued independently to develop its goals, policies and programs. As a result, the entire Federal effort to end employment discrimination in the private sector has suffered.

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in its report, Federal Civil Rights Enforcement Effort noted that OFCC has established industry-wide hiring goals without full consultation with the Commission which possesses substantial knowledge and expertise in this area. The Commission on the other hand, has held hearings to examine the patterns of industry-wide discrimination without consultation or effective participation of OFCC. Cases continue to be referred between the Commission and OFCC on an ad hoc basis.

The report concluded that "until an effective procedure is developed to assure that the Commission and OFCC act in coordination, progress in achieving the goal of equal employment opportunity will continue to be impeded." To achieve this end the report recommends that the contract compliance responsibilities of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance be transferred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

This conclusion corresponds with the recommendations made in an earlier publication of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, Jobs and Civil Rights, prepared by Richard P. Nathan, Associate Director of the Office of Management and Budget, then with the Brookings Institute. Mr. Nathan recommended that the contract compliance function of OFCC be transferred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The report underscored the fact that Title VII and the Executive Order 11246 are addressed to the same problem—identifying and remedying employment discrimination—and that there is not reasonable basis for continuing to have two duplicating mechanisms dealing with the same problem.

The Committee believes that the transfer would substantially increase the effectiveness of both the contract compliance and Title VII enforcement programs. Affirmative action is relevant not only to the enforcement of Executive Order 11246 but is equally essential for more effective enforcement of Title VII in remedying employment discrimination. H.R. 1746 would confer, cease-and-desist authority as well as contract termination and debarment authority on the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The availability of these complementary sanctions will enhance the administration of the Federal equal employment programs.

The Federal contract compliance program always has suffered from the great reluctance of administrators to use debarment and contract termination sanction.

Although contract termination could become an effective sanction if used properly, it is clear that the compliance program could be strength considerably if alternative remedies were made available. An effective way to accomplish this is to transfer the contract compliance effort to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission while at the same time giving the Commission power to issue cease-and-desist orders to prevent unlawful employment practices. Cease-and-desist power exercised by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission would prove to be an effective sanction supplementary or alternative to termination of a contract. Conversely, having the authority to direct that contracts be terminated and contractors debarred would enhance the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's ability to ensure that its cease and desist orders are obeyed.

The transfer of OFCC's contract compliance program to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission will not impair the procurement function of the Executive branch of the government nor will it interfere with the government's internal functions. Primary responsibility for compliance with still rest with the various compliance agencies. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission will be responsible, however, for issuing basic guidelines to coordinate and give guidance to the compliance program. In addition, the Commision will provide an additional independent source of review and resource if the compliance agencies fail to meet their obligations.

STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Presently approximately 10.1 million persons are employed by State and local governmental units. This figure represents an increase of over 2 million employees since 1964. Indications are that the number of employees in State and local government will continue to increase, perhaps even more rapidly. Few of these employees, however, are afforded the protection of an effective forum to assure equal employment. The bill amends section 701 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (section 2 of the bill) to include State and local governments, governmental agencies and political subdivisions within the definition of an "employer" under Title VII. All State and local government employees would under the bill have access to the remedies available under the Act.

In a report released in 1969, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights examined equal employment opportunity in public employment in seven urban areas located throughout the country—North as well as South. The report's findings indicate that widespread discrimination against minorities exists in State and local government employment, and that the existence of this discrimination is perpetuated by the presence of both institutional and overt discriminatory practices. The report cites widespread perpetuation of past discriminatory practices through de facto segregated job ladders, invalid selection techniques, and stereotyped misconceptions by supervisors regarding minority group capabilities. The study also indicates that employment discrimination in State and local governments is more pervasive than in the private sector. The report found that in six of the seven areas studied, Negroes constitute over 70 percent of the common laborers, but that most white-collar jobs were found to be largely inaccessible to minority persons. For example, in Atlanta and Baton Rouge, there were no blacks in city managerial positions.

In another report issued by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in 1970, Mexican Americans and the Administration of Justice in the Southwest, the Commission found, on the basis of a 1968 survey, that in the law enforcement agencies and district attorneys' offices in the five Southwestern States, Mexican Americans were generally underrepresented in proportion to their demographic distribution. The statistics in this report show that in the Southwestern States Mexican Americans, who constitute approximately 12 percent of the population, account for only 5.2 percent of police officers and 6.11 percent of civilian employers with law enforcement agencies.

The problem of employment discrimination is particularly acute and has the most deleterious effect in these governmental activities which are most visible to the minority communities (notably education, law enforcement, and the administration of justice) with the result that the credibility of the government's claim to represent all the people equally is negated.

This widespread discrimination is evidence that State and local governmental units have not instituted equal employment opportunity required by the national policy to eliminate discrimination in employment. In its 1969 report, For All the People . . . By All the People, the U.S. Civil Rights Commission concludes that:

> The basic finding of this report is that State and local governments have failed to fulfill their obligation to assure equal job opportunity. . . . Not only do State and local governments consciously and overtly discriminate in hiring and promoting minority group members, but they do not foster positive programs to deal with discriminatory treatment on the job.

The Constitution is as imperative in its prohibition of discrimination in state and local government employment as it is in barring discrimination in Federal jobs. The courts have consistently held that discrimination by state and local governments, including job discrimination, violates the Fourteenth Amendment and is prohibited.[5]

While an individual has a right of action in the appropriate court if he has been discriminated against, the adequacy of protection against employment discrimination by state and local governments has been severely impeded by the failure of the Congress to provide Federal administrative machinery to assist the aggrieved employee. There are two exceptions. Federal Merit Standards provisions are applied to approximately 250,000 state employees where the Federal and state governments participate jointly in furnishing government services, and there are nondiscrimination requirements Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) contracts which are applicable to approximately 900 local urban renewal agencies and 2,000 local public housing authorities.

Otherwise, state and local governments constitute the only large group of employees in the nation who are almost entirely exempt from Federal nondiscrimination protections. Although the aggrieved individual may enforce his rights directly in the Federal district courts, this remedy, as already noted, is frequently an empty promise due to the expense and time involved in pursuing a Federal court suit. It is unrealistic to expect disadvantaged individuals to bear the burden.

The Committee feels that it is an injustice to provide employees in the private sector with an administrative forum in which to redress their grievances while at the same time, denying a similar protection to the increasing number of state and local employees. Accordingly, H.R. 1746 provides the administrative remedies available to employees in the private sector should also be extended to state and local employees.

In establishing the applicability of Title VII to State and local employees, the Committee wishes to emphasize that the individual's right to file a civil action in his own behalf, pursuant to the Civil Rights Act of 1870 and 1871, 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981 and 1983, is in no way affected. During the floor debate surrounding the passage of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, it was made clear that the Act was not intended to preempt existing rights under the National Labor Relations Act or the Railway Labor Act. Title VII was envisioned as an independent statutory authority meant to provide an aggrieved individual with an additional remedy to redress employment discrimination. Two recent court decisions, Young v. International Telephone and Telegraph Co., ——F. 2d ——, 3 FEP Cases 145 (3rd Cir. 1971) and Saunders v. Dobbs House, 431 F. 2d 1097 (5th Cir. 1970), have affirmed this Committee's belief that the remedies available to the individual under Title VII are co-extensive with the individual's right to sue under the provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1866, 42 U.S.C. § 1981, and that the two procedures augment each other and are not mutually exclusive. The bill, therefore, by extending jurisdiction to State and local government employees does not affect existing rights that such individuals have already been granted by previous legislation.

The expansion of Title VII coverage to State and local government employment is firmly embodied in the principles of the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution has recognized that it is inimical to the democratic form of government to allow the existence of discrimination in those bureaucratic systems which most directly affect the daily interactions of this Nation's citizens. The clear intention of the Constitution, embodied in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments, is to prohibit all forms of discrimination.

Legislation to implement this aspect of the Fourteenth Amendment is long overdue, and the committee believes that an appropriate remedy has been fashioned in the bill. Inclusion of state and local employees among those enjoying the protection of Title VII provides an alternate administrative remedy to the existing prohibition against discrimination perpetuated "under color of state law" as embodied in the Civil Rights Act of 1871, 42 U.S.C. § 1983. In extending Title VII coverage, the Committee recognizes that States frequently can best deal with violations which occur within their boundaries and has, accordingly, retained the provisions of Section 706(b) of the present Act (706(c) under the bill) whereby the Commission will defer to appropriate State agencies cases where the State or local agency can grant the complainant relief similar to that which he can obtain with the Commission under the provisions of this bill.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION EMPLOYEES

The present Section 702 of Title VII exempts educational institution employees connected with educational activities from the equal employment requirements. The bill removes this exemption (Section 3 of the bill).

There is nothing in the legislative background of Title VII, nor does any national policy suggest itself to support the exemption of these educational institution employees—primarily teachers—from Title VII coverage. Discrimination against minorities and women in the field of education is as pervasive as discrimination in any other area of employment. In the field of higher education, the fact that black scholars have been generally relegated to all-black institutions, or have been restricted to lesser academic positions when they have been permitted entry into white institutions is common knowledge. Similarly, in the area of sex discrimination, women have long been invited to participate as students in the academic process, but without the prospect of gaining employment as serious scholars.

When they have been hired into educational institutions, particularly in institutions of higher education, women have been relegated to positions of lesser standing than their male counterparts. In a study conducted by Theodore Kaplow and Reece J. McGee, it was found that the primary factors determining the hiring of male faculty members were prestige and compatability, but that women were generally considered to be outside of the prestige system altogether.[6]

The committee feels that discrimination in educational institutions is especially critical. The committee can not imagine a more sensitive area than educational institutions where the Nation's youth are exposed to a multitude of ideas that will strongly influence their fuure development. To permit discrimination here would, more than in any other area, tend to promote misconceptions leading to future patterns of discrimination. Accordingly, the committee feels that educational institutions, like other employers in the Nation, should report their activities to the Commission and should be subject to the provisions of the Act.

EMPLOYERS AND LABOR UNIONS WITH EIGHT OR MORE EMPLOYEES OR MEMBERS

The bill amends section 701 of the Act, by changing the jurisdictional reach of Title VII to include all employers and labor unions with eight or more employees or members, effective one year after enactment (section 2 of the bill). The present coverage is 25 or more employees or members.

The committee feels that discrimination in employment is contrary to the national policy and equally invidious whether practiced by small or large employers. Because of the existing limitation in the bill proscribing the coverage of Title VII to 25 or more employees or members, a large segment of the Nation's work force is excluded from an effective Federal remedy to redress employment discrimination. For the reasons already stated in earlier sections of this report, the committee feels that the Commission's remedial power should also be available to all segments of the work force. With the amendment proposed by the bill, Federal equal employment protection will be assured to virtually every segment of the Nation's work force.

TESTING

Section 8 of the bill amends subsection 703(h) of the Act and perfects the Title VII provisions dealing with testing and apprenticeship training. Tests, while they are a useful and necessary selection device for management purposes, often operate unreasonably and unnecessarily to the disadvantage of minority individuals. General intelligence tests commonly used by employers as selection devices for hiring and promotion deprive minority group members of equal employment opportunities.[7] Culturally disadvantaged groups—groups which because of low incomes, substandard housing, poor education, and other "atypical" environmental experiences—perform less well on these types of tests on the average than do applicants from middle class environments. The net result is that members from culturally disadvantaged groups are screened out of employment and training programs merely because of their failure to score well on such tests. Such tests are often irrelevant to the job to be performed by the individual being tested and uncritical reliance on test results may not aid management decisions and selection of personnel, but will screen out the disadvantaged minority individual.

In a report issued in 1970, Personnel Testing and Employment Opportunity, the Commission describes the ways in which employment tests can discriminate against minority groups. An aptitude test that fails to predict job performance in the same way for both minorities and whites, or fails to predict job performance at all is an invalid test. If such a test is weighted to differentiate between blacks and whites, it is similarly discriminatory. Tests may discriminate in the social sense if they deny equal opportunity for consideration. A test which tends to discriminate generally operates in the following manner: (a) when scores on it tend to differentiate between identifiable sub-groups where sub-grouping itself is not a relevant factor, and either (b) scores for the lower group underpredict performance on the job when the standards of the upper group are applied, or (c) scores on the test do not predict job performance of either group.

The Supreme Court recently examined the problem of employment testing and its relationship to employment discrimination in its decision in Griggs v. Duke Power Co., ——— U.S. ———, 91 S. Ct. 849 (1971). In its decision, the court held that employment tests, even if valid on their face and applied in a non-discriminatory manner, were invalid if they tended to discriminate against minorities and the company could not show an overriding reason why such tests were necessary. At page 5 of its opinion, the Court stated:

> The objective of Congress in the enactment of Title VII is plain from the language of the statute. It was to achieve equality of employment opportunities and remove barriers that have operated in the past to favor an identifiable group of white employees over other employees. Under the Act, practices, procedures, or tests neutral on their face, and even neutral in terms of intent cannot be maintained if they operate to "freeze" the status quo of prior discriminatory practices.

The Court stated further, on page 6 of its opinion, that:

> Congress has now provided that tests or criteria for employment or promotion may not provide equality of opportunity only in the sense of the fabled offer of milk for the stork and the fox. On the contrary, Congress has now required that the posture and condition of the job seeker be taken into account . . . . The Act proscribes not only overt discrimination but also practices that are fair in form but discriminatory in operation. The touchstone is business necessity. If an employment practice which excludes Negroes cannot be shown to be related to job performance, the practice is prohibited.

The provisions of the bill are fully in accord with the decision of the Court and with the testing guidelines established by the Commission. The addition of the requirement for a bona fide occupational qualification which is reasonably necessary to perform the normal duties of the position to which it is applied requires that employers, who use employment tests as determinants for qualifications of employees for a particular job, must determine whether the test is necessary for the particular position to which it is applied. Even after such determination, if the use of the test acts to maintain existing or past discriminatory imbalances in the job, or tends to discriminate against applicants on the basis of race, color, religion, sex or national origin, the employer must show an overriding business necessity to justify use of the test.

Section 8 perfects Title VII's provisions with respect to testing and apprenticeship training. With regard to testing, the amendment is limited to tests for particular positions; it is not intended to apply to tests given to ascertain potential ability to undertake apprenticeship or other learning capacities. Of course, tests given for apprenticeship and related status must satisfy the requirement that the test, its administration or action upon the results, is not designed, intended, used, or have the effect of discriminating because of race, color, religion, sex or national origin.

FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT

The bill adds a new section 717 (section 11 of the bill) which, in paragraphs (a) and (b), gives the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission the authority to enforce the obligations of equal employment opportunity in Federal employment.

The Federal service is an area where equal employment opportunity is of paramount significance. Americans rely upon the maxim, "government of the people," and traditionally measure the quality of their democracy by the opportunity they have to participate in governmental processes. It is therefore imperative that equal opportunity be the touchstone of the Federal system.

The prohibition against discrimination by the Federal Government, based upon the due process clause of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, was judicially recognized long before the enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.[1] And Congress itself has specifically provided that it is "the policy of the United States to insure equal employment opportunities for Federal employees without discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. . . ." (5 U.S.C. § 7151 (Supp. II 1965, 1966)).

The primary responsibility for implementing this stated national policy has rested with the Civil Service Commission, pursuant to Executive Order 11246 (1964) as clarified by Executive Order 11478.

In his memorandum accompanying Executive Order 11478, President Nixon stated that "discrimination of any kind based on factors ot relevant to job performance must be eradicated completely from ederal employment." Accordingly there can exist no justification for ıything but a vigorous effort to accord Federal employees the same ghts and impartial treatment which the law seeks to afford employees the private sector.

Despite some progress that has been made in this area, the record far from satisfactory. Statistical evidence shows that minorities ıd women continue to be excluded from large numbers of government bs, particularly at the higher grade levels. According to statistics leased by the Civil Service Commission, as of May 31, 1970, minor- ies accounted for 19.4 percent of the total number of government em- oyees and 14.4 percent of general schedule employees. An examina- on of the distribution of employees within the various levels of the ederal system shows that the majority of these employees are at the wer levels of government employment. Approximately 80% of the inority employees on the general schedule are in grades 1 through 8. grades GS-1 through 4 minorities account for 27.3 percent of all ıployees, and in grades GS-5 through 8 they represent 17.2 percent all employees. On the other end of the scale, in grades GS-14 rough 15, minorities represent only 3.3 percent of all employees, and grades GS-16 through 18 minorities account for 2.0 percent of all ıployees. These figures represent little improvement over the statis- s from the previous study done by the Civil Service Commission in ovember, 1969. In fact comparison of the two sets of figures shows perceptible change in the proportion of minorities in the Federal rvice during the 6 month period. Although minority representation positions above GS-14 has increased slightly the minority concen- ation in the lower level positions (GS-1-4) has also increased by % from 26.7%.

The figures for Spanish-surnamed employees reflect a similar pat- rn. For example, according to the 1970 statistics, only 2.9% of the ederal employees were Spanish-surnamed (this was an increase from 8% in November, 1969). Only .63% of the government executives GS-14—18) were Spanish-surnamed. Over 72% of the Spanish-sur- med employees on the General Schedule were in positions of GS-8 d below.

Moreover, figures show different levels of minority representation thin the different agencies. For example, although 15% of Federal ıployees are Negro, only 5.2% of the Department of Interior's em- oyees are Negro and 2.9% of NASA's employees are Negro. Ac- rding to 1967 figures, fewer than 550 of the Federal Aviation Ad- inistration's air traffic controllers out of a total of over 20,000 were inority. Only 13 out of the Administration's 1,612 supervisory and dministrative personnel (GS-14 to 18) were Negro.

This disproportionatte distribution of minorities and women roughout the Federal bureaucracy and their exclusion from higher vel policy-making and supervisory positions indicates the govern- ent's failure to pursue its policy of equal opportunity.

A critical defect of the Federal equal employment program has en the failure of the complaint process. That process has impeded ther than advanced the goal of the elimination of discrimination in Federal employment. The defect, which existed under the old com plaint procedure, was not corrected by the new complaint process. Th new procedure, intended to provide for the informal resolution complaints, has, in practice, denied employees adequate opportuni for impartial investigation and resolution of complaints.

Under the revised procedure, effective July 1, 1969, the agency still responsible for investigating and judging itself. Although th procedure provides for the appointment of a hearing examiner fro an outside agency, the examiner does not have the authority to condu an independent investigation. Further, the conclusions and findings the examiner are in the nature of recommendations to the agency hea who makes the final agency determination as to whether discrimin tion exists. Although the complaint procedure provides for an appe to the Board of Appeals and Review in the Civil Service Commissio the record shows that the Board rarely reverses the agency decision.

The system, which permits the Civil Service Commission to sit judgment over its own practices and procedures which themselves ma raise questions of systemic discrimination, creates a built-in conflic of-interest.

Testimony reflected a general lack of confidence in the effectivene of the complaint procedure on the part of Federal employees. Com plainants were skeptical of the Civil Service Commission's record obtaining just resolutions of complaints and adequate remedies. Th has discouraged persons from filing complaints with the Commissio for fear that it will only result in antagonizing their supervisors an impairing any hope of future advancement.

Aside from the inherent structural defects the Civil Service Com mission has been plagued by a general lack of expertise in recognizin and isolating the various forms of discrimination which exist in th system. The revised directives to Federal agencies which the Civ Service Commission has issued are inadequate to meet the challenge eliminating systemic discrimination. The Civil Service Commissio seems to assume that employment discrimination is primarily a proble of malicious intent on the part of individuals. It apparently has n recognized that the general rules and procedures it has promulgate may actually operate to the disadvantage of minorities and wome in systemic fashion. All too frequently policies established at the polic level of the Civil Service Commission do not penetrate to lower admi nistrative levels. The result is little or no action in areas where unlawf practices are most pronounced. Civil Service selection and promotio requirements are replete with artificial selection and promotion r quirements that place a premium on "paper" credentials which fr quently prove of questionable value as a means of predicting actual jo performance. The problem is further aggravated by the agency's use general ability tests which are not aimed at any direct relationship specific jobs. The inevitable consequence of this, as demonstrated b similar practices in the private sector, and, found unlawful by th Supreme Court, is that classes of persons who are culturally or educ tionally disadvantaged are subjected to a heavier burden in seekin employment.

To correct this entrenched discrimination in the Federal service, is necessary to insure the effective application of uniform, fair an trongly enforced policies. The present law and the proposed statute o not permit industry and labor organizations to be the judges of heir own conduct in the area of employment discrimination. There is o reason why government agencies should not be treated similarly. ndeed, the government itself should set the example by permitting its onduct to be reviewed by an impartial tribunal. Because the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission is the expert agency in the eld of employment discrimination and because it is an independent gency removed from the administration of Federal employment, it s the most logical place for the enforcement power to be vested.

Despite the series of executive and administrative directives on equal nployment opportunity, Federal employees, unlike those in the pri- ate sector to whom Title VII is applicable, face legal obstacles in otaining meaningful remedies. There is serious doubt that court re- iew is available to the aggrieved Federal employee. Monetary restitu- on or back pay is not attainable. In promotion situations, a critical rea of discrimination, the promotion is often no longer available. nformation and documents contained in Government files are not otainable since the Freedom of Information Act exempts internal ersonnel rules. Under the proposed law, court review, back pay, pro- notions, reinstatement, and appropriate affirmative relief is available employees in the private sector; also the Commission has broad owers to conduct an intensive investigation and obtain access to all ertinent records.

The Commission is established as a government administrative gency to protect employees against discrimination. This agency under ie proposed law assumes the burden and expense of litigation to obtain lequate redress for the employee. These substantial benefits and pro- ctions are not presently available to the Federal employee. Presently ie Federal employee is entirely dependent on his own resources and oes not have recourse to an impartial governmental agency with eveloped expertise.

The transfer of the civil rights enforcement function from the ivil Service Commission to the Equal Employment Opportunity ommission does not preclude the Civil Service Commission from aintaining its internal equal employment programs. Consistent with ederal law it is expected that the Civil Service Commission and the ederal agencies will continue their commitment to affirmative meas- es such as recruiting and training, specialized hiring programs, e training of compliance personnel and supervisory Federal per- nnel in equal employment, and the appointment of EEO officers. all these cases, the primary responsibility shall rest with the Civil ervice Commission and the other Federal agencies. The Equal Em- oyment Opportunity Commission will work closely with these gencies to aid the development and maintenance of programs which ill best serve the needs for equal employment in the government. is expected that the expertise of the Equal Employment Oppor- nities Commission will be utilized to review existing programs, to aluate new systems which will be established, and to issue guide- nes and standards where appropriate. The Equal Employment Op- rtunity Commission will be authorized by the statute to hear complaints of discrimination in Federal employment and establish ap propriate procedures for an impartial adjudication of the complaint An employee of a Federal agency may have recourse to a civ action, as provided in section 715 (discussed infra), if he is not satis fied with the disposition of his complaint.

and local governments, governmental agencies and politica subdivisions.

Section 701(b).—This subsection would extend coverage of em ployers to those with eight or more employees at the end of the firs year. This subsection would broaden the meaning of "employer" t include State and local governments and the District of Columbi departments or agencies (except those subject by statute to procedure of the Federal competitive service as defined in 5 USC 2102).

Section 701(c).—This subsection eliminates the exemption fo agencies of the States or of political subdivisions of States from th definition of "employment agency" in order to conform with th expanded coverage of State and local governments in section 701(a and (b).

Section 701(e).—This subsection is revised to include coverage o labor organizations with eight or more members after the first year.

Section 701(h).—This subsection is revised to include "any govern mental industry, business, or activity" in the definition of "industr affecting commerce."

Section 3. Educational Institutions

Section 702.—Comparable to present Section 702. The exemptio currently provided to certain employees (primarily teachers) of educa tional institutions is deleted.

Section 4. Employment

Section 706(a).—New Section. The Commission is empowered t prevent any person from engaging in any unlawful employment prac tice as set forth in Sections 703 or 704.

Section 706(b).—Comparable to present Section 706(a). The require ment that aggrieved person's charges be made under oath is deleted Charges shall contain such information as the Commission requires Charges may also be filed on behalf of persons aggrieved. The Com mission shall make its finding as to reasonable cause as promptly a possible, and so far as is practicable, not later than 120 days from th filing of the charge, or when deferral is applicable under subsectio
(c) or (d), from the date on which the Commission is authorized t take action with respect to the charge. If reasonable cause is not found the Commission shall dismiss the charge, giving prompt notificatio to the parties. The conciliation and confidentiality provisions ar retained.

Section 706(c).—Comparable to present Section 706(b). Charges o persons in FEPC States may be filed with the Commission, but the la ter may take no action until 60 days after commencement of proceedings in the appropriate State or local agency (120 days if a new agency). The latter proceeding shall be deemed to have commenced at the time a written statement of the facts is sent to such agency by certified mail.

Section 706(d).—Comparable to present Section 706(c).

Section 706(e).—Comparable to present Section 706(d). The 90 day filing period is expanded to 180 days, and the 210 day period to 300 days (or 30 days after receiving notice of termination of proceedings, whichever comes earlier). Provision is added requiring that a copy of the charge be served on the respondent as soon as practicable after filing.

Section 706(f).—Comparable to present Section 706(e). After attempting to secure voluntary compliance under subsection (b), if the Commission determines (which determination is not reviewable in any court) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission and the person aggrieved, the Commission shall issue and cause to be served upon the respondent a complaint stating the facts upon which the allegation of the unlawful employment practice is based, together with a notice of hearing before the Commission, or a member or agent of it, at a specified place not less than 5 days after service of the complaint and notice. Any member of the Commission who filed a charge in any case shall not participate in a hearing on any complaint arising out of such charge, except as a witness.

Section 706(g).—New Section. Respondent has the right to file an answer to the complaint and with the Commission's permission, may amend his answer at any time if deemed reasonable. Respondent and the person aggrieved shall be parties and may appear at any stage of the proceedings with or without counsel. The Commission may grant others the right to intervene or file briefs or make oral arguments as amicus curiae, or for other purposes as it considers appropriate. All testimony shall be taken under oath and shall be reduced to writing.

Section 706(h).—New Section. If the Commission finds that respondent has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served upon the respondent and aggrieved person an order requiring the respondent to cease and desist from such unlawful employment practice and take such affirmative action (including reinstatement or hiring with or without back pay) as will effectuate the policies of the Act. Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. Such order may further require the respondent to make reports from time to time showing the extent to which he has complied with the order. If the Commission finding is that no unlawful employment practice occurred, it shall state its findings of fact and so notify the respondent and complainant of an order dismissing the complaint.

Section 706(i).—New Section. After a charge has been filed and until the record has been filed in court, the proceedings may at any time be ended by agreement between the Commission and the parties and the Commission may at any time, upon reasonable notice, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any order or finding issued or made by

it. An agreement approved by the Commission shall be enforceable un der subsection (k).

Section 706(j).—New Section. Findings of fact or orders made or issued under subsection (b) or (i) shall be determined on the record

Section 706(k).—New Section. The Commission may petition any U.S. Court of Appeals wherein whose circuit the unlawful employment practice occurred or wherein respondent resides or transacts business, for enforcement of its order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order. The Commission shall file in the court the record of its proceedings as provided in section 2112 of title 28 of the U.S. Code. Upon serving notice on the parties, the court shall have jurisdiction and the power to grant such temporary relief, restraining order, or other order as it deems just and proper and enter upon the record a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Commission. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its member or its agent shall be considered by the court except under extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact shall be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole. The court may order additional evidence to be taken by the Commission, which may then modify its fact findings. Upon the filing of the record with it, the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree final, subject only to review by the Supreme Court.

Section 706(l).—New Section. Any party aggrieved by a final order of the Commission may obtain review of such order in any U.S. Court of Appeals in the circuit wherein the unlawful employment practice was alleged to have been engaged in or wherein such person resides or transacts business, or in the D.C. Court of Appeals. Upon receiving a copy of such petition, the Commission shall file in the court the record of its proceedings, and the court shall then proceed in the same manner as in the case of a petition by the Commission under subsection (k). Commencement of proceedings under this subsection or subsection (k) shall not operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

Section 706(m).—New Section. The provisions of 29 U.S.C. 101-115 with respect to preliminary injunctions are made inapplicable to judicial proceedings under the Title.

Section 706(n).—New Section. The general counsel of the Commission shall conduct all litigation affecting it, or to which it is a party except that the Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court.

Section 706(o).—New Section. When after the filing of a charge the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve the power of the Commission to grant effective relief, it may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief in the district court for the district where the unlawful employment practice is alleged to have been committed, or in the district where the aggrieved person would have been employed, or if the respondent cannot be found in these districts, in the district where the respondent has his principal office. Upon the bringing of such action, the district court may grant such injunctive relief or temporary restraining order as it deems just and proper as governed by Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedures.

Section 5. Records Required To Be Kept and Investigations

Section 707(c).—New Section. Any record or paper required by section 709(c) shall be made available to the Commission on written demand, for purposes of inspection and copying, but unless otherwise ordered by a court of the United States, the Commission shall not disclose any information thus obtained except to Congress or any committee thereof, a governmental agency, or in the presentation of any case or preceding before any court or grand jury. The appropriate district court may compel the production of such records or papers.

Section 707(d).—Transfers the function of the Attorney General with respect to patterns or practice of resistance to the full enjoyment of the rights secured by Title VII, together with personnel, property, records and funds, to the Commission.

Section 707(e).—Provides for continuation by the Commission of pending proceedings brought by the Attorney General under Section 707.

Section 707(f).—Assimilates procedures for new proceedings brought under Section 707 to those now provided for under Section 706 so that the Commission may provide an administrative procedure to be the counterpart of the present Section 707 action.

Section 6. State and Local Agencies, Recordkeeping

Section 709(b).—Comparable to present Section 709(b). The contracts to State and local agencies language is enlarged to include Commission contributions to research and other projects of mutual interest, and payment to State and local agencies may be made in advance as well as in reimbursement. The provisions concerning agreements whereby no civil actions may be brought is omitted. The power of the Commission to rescind any agreement no longer serving the interest of effective enforcement is retained.

Section 709(c).—The Section 709(d) reporting exemption is deleted, and the hardship language is changed to require that persons or organizations alleging hardship must exhaust the relief processes provided by the Commission before applying for relief in the district court.

Section 709(d).—Deletes the present subsection, and in its place provides that the Commission shall consult with other interested State and Federal agencies and shall endeavor to coordinate its requirements with those of such other agencies. The Commission shall furnish information obtained pursuant to subsection (c) of this section without cost to any State or local FEPC on request, except that public disclosure of such information provided on the part of such State or local agency prior to the institution of a proceeding under State or local law shall be grounds for declining to honor subsequent requests pursuant to this subsection.

Section 7. Commission Investigations

Section 710.—Comparable to present Section 710. Incorporates the provisions of section 11 of the NLRA (29 U.S.C. 161). The Commission shall have access to and the right to copy evidence of a person being investigated or proceeded against that relates to the matter under investigation or in question. It shall issue subpenas to parties on application requiring the presence and testimony of witnesses and the production of evidence as specified in such application. Within 5 days of service, the person served may petition the Commission to revoke its subpena on grounds that the evidence sought is not relevant to the matter in question. Attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence may be required from any place in the United States or its possessions, and any Federal court with jurisdiction may enforce such subpenas by order. Witnesses may not refuse to answer questions on grounds of self incrimination, but may not be subsequently proceeded against on the basis of information thus gained. Complaints, orders and other processes may be served personally or by registered mail or telegraph, or by leaving a copy at the principal office of the person to be served. No subpena shall be issued to any party to a proceeding before the Commission until after the respondent has been served a copy of the complaint and notice of hearing under section 706(f). Witnesses and persons making depositions shall receive the same mileage and fees as witnesses and persons making depositions in the district courts.

Section 8: Selection Procedures, Apprenticeship Programs, Commission Organization

Section 703(a)(2).—Comparable to present Section 703(a)(2). Adds "or applicants for employment" after "employees."

Section 703(c)(2).—Comparable to present Section 703(c)(2). Adds "or applicants for membership" after "membership."

Section 703(h).—Comparable to present Section 703(h). Retains the seniority and merit system language, but changes the testing provisions to stipulate that such tests must be directly related to the determination of bona fide occupational qualifications reasonably necessary to perform the normal duties of the particular position concerned. The provision prohibiting tests designed or used to discriminate on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, or sex is retained.

Section 704(a) and (b).—Comparable to present Section 704(a) and (b). Adds 'or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs"; after "employment agency."

Section 705(a).—Comparable to present Section 705(a). Amends the Section to include "members of the Commission shall continue to serve until their successors are appointed and qualified," provided that no such member shall continue to serve for more than 60 days when the Congress is in session unless a nomination to fill the vacancy has been submitted to the Senate, or after the adjournment sine die of the session of the Senate in which such nomination was submitted. The section also adds "hearing examiners" to the appointments the Chairman may make in accordance with title 5, U.S.C. on behalf of the Commission, and provides that assignment, removal and compensation of such hearing examiners shall be in accordance with sections 3105, 3344, 5362 and 7521 of title 5, U.S.C. Section 3105 provides for the appointment of the necessary number of hearing examiners, requires that they be assigned to cases in rotation, and stipulates that they may not be assigned duties that are inconsistent with their position as hearing examiners. Section 3344 authorizes an agency's use of hearing examiners from other agencies as selected by the Civil Service Commission if the borrowing agency is short staffed. Section 5362 states that such hearing examiners are entitled to the pay prescribed by the Civil Service Commission for them independently of agency recommendations or ratings, in accordance with subchapter III and chapter 51 of title 5, U.S.C. Section 7521 allows removal of hearing examiners only for good cause established and determined by the Civil Service Commission on the record after hearing.

Section 705(g)(1).—Comparable to present Section 705(g)(1). Adds "and to accept voluntary and uncompensated services, notwithstanding that provisions of section 3679(b) of the Revised Statutes" after the word "individuals."

Section 705(g)(6).—Comparable to present Section 706(g)(6). Substitutes Section "715" for Section "706."

Section 713(c) and (d).—New subsections. Authorizes the Commission to delegate its powers with respect to investigating, conciliating, hearing, determining, ordering, certifying, reporting, or otherwise acting to such persons as the Commission may designate by regulation, with certain exceptions. The exceptions concern the power to issue cease and desist orders, the power to modify or set aside findings under subsections (i) and (k) of Section 706, certain aspects of the rule-making powers, and the power to enter into or rescind agreements with State and local agencies as provided in subsection (b) of Section 709. The Commission is specifically not authorized to provide for persons other than those referred to in section 556, subsection (b), clauses (2) and (3) of title 5, U.S.C. to conduct any hearing to which that section applies. New subsection (d) authorizes the Commission to delegate to any group of three or more of its members any or all of the powers which it may itself exercise.

Section 714.—Comparable to present Section 714. Adds section 1114 of title 18, U.S.C. (murder of Commission employees).

Section 715.—New Section, comparable in part to present Section 706. Deletes the provisions of the present Section 715, which called for a 1965 study of discrimination because of age, provides that if the Commission dismisses a charge after a preliminary investigation indicates no cause, or on grounds of lack of jurisdiction, or if after 180 days from the filing of a charge the Commission has not made a finding of no reasonable cause or entered into a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved, the Commission shall notify the aggrieved party, and within 60 days of such notification such party may bring a civil action against the respondent named in the charge. The court may upon application appoint an attorney for such complainant, and may dispense with the payment of fees, costs, or security. It may also permit the Commission to intervene if it certifies that the cause is of general public importance. Upon the commencement of such action the Commission is divested of jurisdiction over the proceeding and may take no further action, except that the court may in its discretion stay further proceedings for not longer than 60 days pending termination of State or local proceedings, or the efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance. Subsections (b) and (c) retain the procedural provisions of present section 706, subsections (f) and (g), while subsections (d), (e), and (f) duplicate Section 706, subsections (i), (j) and (k), the latter subsection modified to delete the exceptions of the Commission and the United States in regard to attorney's fees and to change the words "prevailing party" to "prevailing plaintiff." Present subsection (h) excepting such proceedings from the provisions of 29 U.S.C. 101–115 is retained with modified language at Section 706(m).

Section 9. Commissioner's Compensation.

Title 5, U.S.C. Add "Chairman, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission" at the end of section 5314 (Level III Positions). Add "Members, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission" to clause (72) of section 5315 (Level IV Positions). Repeal clause (111) of section 5316 (the Level V slot presently occuped by Members of the Commission).

Section 10. Pending Cases

Sections 706 and 710 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended by this Act, shall not be applicable to charges filed with the Commission prior to the effective date of this Act.

Section 11. Federal Employees, Federal Contractors

Section 717(a) and (b).—New Section. All personnel actions affecting employees of applicants for employment in the competitive service of the United States or in positions of the District of Columbia Government covered by the Civil Service Retirement Act shall be made free from any discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission shall enforce the nondiscrimination provisions of subsection (a), and shall issue appropriate rules, regulations, orders, and instructions. The responsibilities of the Civil Service Commission with regard to nondiscrimination in Federal employment are transferred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. This, of course, will not relieve the Civil Service Commission, the Federal agencies, or the District of Columbia, of their affirmative responsibilities to assure equal opportunity in government employment, nor transfer any functions relating thereto (as distinguished from enforcement functions).

Section 717(c).—Persons aggrieved by the final disposition of complaints may, within thirty days of receipt of notice, file a civil action in the same manner as in Section 715, in which action the head of the executive department or agency, or the District of Columbia, as appropriate, shall be the respondent.

Section 717(d).—With respect to employment discrimination by government contractors and subcontractors and federally assisted construction contractors and subcontractors, this subsection, effectively, transfers those functions of the Secretary of Labor, established pursuant to Executive Order 11246, to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Under the provisions of this bill the Commission assumes the statutory responsibility to carry out all such authority, functions, and responsibilities in order to enforce and implement the substantive requirements.

Section 718.—New Section. Reiterates the individual obligation of all Government agencies or officials to assure nondiscrimination in employment.

Section 12. Effective Date of Section 11

New Section 717, added by Section 11 of the Act shall become effective six months after the effective date of the Act.

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW MADE BY THE BILL, AS REPORTED

In compliance with clause 3 of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, changes in existing law made by the bill, as reported, are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italic, existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman):

(c) The term "employment agency" means any person regularly undertaking with or without compensation to procure employees for an employer or to procure for employees opportunities to work for an employer and includes an agent of such a person; but shall not include an agency of the United States, [or an agency of a State or political subdivision of a State,] except that such term shall include the United States Employment Service and the system of State and local employment services receiving Federal assistance.

(d) The term "labor organization" means a labor organization engaged in an industry affecting commerce, and any agent of such an organization, and includes any organization of any kind, any agency, or employee representation committee, group, association, or plan so engaged in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours, or other terms or conditions of employment, and any conference, general committee, joint or system board, or joint council so engaged which is subordinate to a national or international labor organization.

(e) A labor organization shall be deemed to be engaged in an industry affecting commerce if (1) it maintains or operates a hiring hall or hiring office which procures employees for an employer or procures for employees opportunities to work for an employer, or (2) the number of its members (or, where it is a labor organization composed of other labor organizations or their representatives, if the aggregate number of the members of such other labor organization) is (A) one hundred or more during the first year after the effective date prescribed in subsection (a) of section 716, (B) seventy-five or more during the second year after such date or fifty or more during the third year, or (C) [twenty-five] eight or more thereafter, and such labor organization—

(1) is the certified representative of employees under the provision of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, or the Railway Labor Act, as amended;

(2) although not certified, is a national or international labor organization or a local labor organization recognized or acting as the representative of employees of an employer or employers engaged in an industry affecting commerce; or

(3) has chartered a local labor organization or subsidiary body which is representing or actively seeking to represent employees of employers within the meaning of paragraph (1) or (2); or

(4) has been chartered by a labor organization representing or actively seeking to represent employees within the meaning of paragraph (1) or (2) as the local or subordinate body through which such employees may enjoy membership or become affiliated with such labor organization; or

(5) is a conference, general committee, joint or system board, or joint council subordinate to a national or international labor organization, which includes a labor organization engaged in an industry affecting commerce within the meaning of any of the preceding paragraphs of this subsection.

(f) The term "employee" means an individual employed by an employer.

(g) The term "commerce" means trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several States; or between a State and any place outside thereof; or within the District of Columbia, or a possession of the United States; or between points in the same State but through a point outside thereof.

(h) The term "industry affecting commerce" means any activity, business, or industry in commerce or in which a labor dispute would hinder or obstruct commerce or the free flow of commerce and includes any activity or industry "affecting commerce" within the meaning of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, and further includes any governmental industry, business, or activity.

(i) The term "State" includes a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, Wake Island, the Canal Zone, and Outer Continental Shelf lands defined in the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act.

EXEMPTION

SEC. 702. This title shall not apply to an employer with respect to the employment of aliens outside any State, or to a religious corporation, association, or society with respect to the employment of individuals of a particular religion to perform work connected with the carrying on by such corporation, association, or society of its religious activities [or to an educational institution with respect to the employment of individuals to perform work connected with the educational activities of such institution].

DISCRIMINATION BECAUSE OF RACE, COLOR, RELIGION, SEX, OR NATIONAL ORIGIN

SEC. 703. (a) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—

(1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; or

(2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employees or applicants for employment in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

(b) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employment agency to fail or refuse to refer for employment, or otherwise to discriminate against, any individual because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, or to classify or refer for employment any individual on the basis of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

(c) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for a labor organization—

(1) to exclude or to expel from its membership, or otherwise to discriminate against, any individual because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin;

(2) to limit, segregate, or classify its membership or applicants for membership, or to classify or fail or refuse to refer for employment any individual, in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities, or would limit such employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee or as an applicant for employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; or

(3) to cause or attempt to cause an employer to discriminate against an individual in violation of this section.

(d) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for any employer, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs to discriminate against any individual because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in admission to, or employment in, any program established to provide apprenticeship or other training.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, (1) it shall not be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to hire and employ employees, for an employment agency to classify, or refer for employment any individual, for a labor organization to classify its membership or to classify or refer for employment any individual, or for an employer, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining programs to admit or employ any individual in any such program, on the basis of his religion, sex, or national origin in these certain instances where religion, sex, or national origin is a bona fide occupational qualification reasonably necessary to the normal opeartion of that particular business or enterprise, and (2) it shall not be an unlawful employment practice for a school, college, university, or other educational institution or institution of learning to hire and employ employees of a particular religion if such school, college, university, or other educational institution or institution of learning is, in whole or in substantial part, owned, supported, controlled, or managed by a particular religion or by a particular religious corporation, association, or society, or if the curriculum of such school, college, university, or other educational institution or institution of learning is directed toward the propagation of a particular religion.

(f) As used in this title, the phrase "unlawful employment practice" shall not be deemed to include any action or measure taken by an employer, labor organization, joint labor-management committee, or employment agency with respect to an individual who is a member of the Communist Party of the United States or of any other organization required to register as a Communist-action or Communist-front organization by final order of the Subversive Activities Control Board pursuant to the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950.

(g) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, it shall not be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to fail or refuse to hire and employ any individual for any position, for an employer to discharge any individual from any position, or for an employment agency to fail or refuse to refer any individual for employment in any position, or for a labor organization to fail or refuse to refer any individual for employment in any position, if—

(1) the occupancy of such position, or access to the premises in or upon which any part of the duties of such position is performed or is to be performed, is subject to any requirement imposed in the interest of the national security of the United States under any security program in effect pursuant to or administered under any statute of the United States or any Executive order of the President; and

(2) such individual has not fulfilled or has ceased to fulfill that requirement.

(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, it shall not be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to apply different standards of compensation, or different terms, conditions, or privileges of employment pursuant to a bona fide seniority or merit system, or a system which measures earnings by quantity or quality of production or to employees who work in different locations, provided that such differences are not the result of an intention to discriminate because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, nor shall it be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to give and to act upon the results of any professionally developed ability test [provided that] which is directly related to the determination of bona fide occupational qualifications reasonably necessary to perform the normal duties of the particular position concerned: Provided, That such test, its administration or action upon the results is not designed, intended, or used to discriminate because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. It shall not be an unlawful employment practice under this title for any employer to differentiate upon the basis of sex in determining the amount of the wages or compensation paid or to be paid to employees of such employer if such differentiation is authorized by the provisions of section 6(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (29 U.S.C. 206(d)).

(i) Nothing contained in this title shall apply to any business or enterprise on or near an Indian reservation with respect to any publicly announced employment practice of such business or enterprise under which a preferential treatment is given to any individual because he is an Indian living on or near a reservation.

(j) Nothing contained in this title shall be interpreted to require any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee subject to this title to grant preferential treatment to any individual or to any group because of the race, color, religion, sex, or national origin of such individual or group on account of an imbalance which may exist with respect to the total number or percentage of persons of any race, color, religion, sex, or national origin employed by any employer, referred or classified for employment by any employment agency or labor organization, admitted to membership or classified by any labor organization, or admitted to, or employed in, any apprenticeship or other training program, in comparison with the total number or percentage of persons of such race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in any community, State, section, or other area, or in the available work force in any community, State, section, or other area.

OTHER UNLAWFUL EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

SEC. 704. (a) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to discriminate against any of his employees or applicants for employment, for an employment agency or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs, to discriminate against any individual, or for a labor organization to discriminate against any member thereof or applicant for membership, because he has opposed any practice made an unlawful employment practice by this title, or because he has made a charge, testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or hearing under this title.

(b) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer, labor organization, [or employment agency] employment agency, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs, to print or publish or cause to be printed or published any notice or advertisement relating to employment by such an employer or membership in or any classification or referral for employment by such a labor organization, or relating to any classification or referral for employment by such an employment agency, or relating to admission to, or employment in, any program established to provide apprenticeship or other training by such a joint labor-management committee indicating any preference, limitation, specification, or discrimination, based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, except that such a notice or advertisement may indicate a preference, limitation, specification, or discrimination based on religion, sex, or national origin when religion, sex, or national origin is a bona fide occupational qualification for employment.

SEC. 705. ate or local law, unless such proceedings have been earlier termited, provided that such sixty-day period shall be extended to one ndred and twenty days during the first year after the effective te of such State or local law. If any requirement for the com-ncement of such proceedings is imposed by a State or local author-other than a requirement of the filing of a written and signed tement of the facts upon which the proceeding is based, the pro-ding shall be deemed to have been commenced for the purposes of is subjection at the time such statement is sent by registered mail the appropriate State or local authority.

[(c) In the case of any charge filed by a member of the Commission eging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State or litical subdivision of a State, which has a State or local law pro-biting the practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to stitute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving tice thereof, the Commission shall, before taking any action with pect to such charge, notify the appropriate State or local officials d, upon request, afford them a reasonable time, but not less than ty days (provided that such sixty-day period shall be extended one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effece day of such State or local law), unless a shorter period is quested, to act under such State or local law to remedy the practice eged.

[(d) A charge under subsection (a) shall be filed within ninety days er the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, except that the case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which person aggrieved has followed the procedure set out in subsection ), such charge shall be filed by the person aggrieved within two ndred and ten days after the alleged unlawful employment practice urred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or al law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be d by the Commission with the State or local agency.

[(e) If within thirty days after a charge is filed with the Commisn or within thirty days after expiration of any period of reference der subsection (c) (except that in either case such period may be ended to not more than sixty days upon a determination by the mmission that further efforts to secure voluntary compliance are rranted), the Commission has been unable to obtain voluntary mpliance with this title, the Commission shall so notify the person grieved and a civil action may, within thirty days thereafter, be ought against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person iming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was grieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon plication by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court y deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such com-inant and may authorize the commencement of the action without payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the rt may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, sta further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending the term nation of State or local proceedings described in subsection (b) or th efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance.

[(f) Each United States district court and each United State court of a place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States sha have jurisdiction of actions brought under this title. Such an actio may be brought in any judicial district in the State in which th unlawful employment practice is alleged to have been committed, i the judicial district in which the employment records relevant to suc practice are maintained and administered, or in the judicial district i which the plaintiff would have worked but for the alleged unlawfu employment practice, but if the respondent is not found within an such district, such an action may be brought within the judicial distric in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sec tions 1404 and 1406 of title 28 of the United States Code, the judicia district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in al cases be considered a district in which the action might have bee brought.

[(g) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally en gaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment prac tice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order suc affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include reinstate ment or hiring of employees, with or without back pay (payable by th employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case ma be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice). Interim earn ings or amounts earnable with reasonable dilligence by the person o persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the back pa otherwise allowable. No order of the court shall require the admis sion or reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union or th hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee or the payment to him of any back pay, if such individual was refuse admission, suspended, or expelled or was refused employment or ad vancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other tha discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex or national origi or in violation of section 704(a).

[(h) The provisions of the Act entitled "An Act to amend th Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sittin in equity, and for other purposes," approved March 23, 1932 (29 U.S.C 101 115), shall not apply with respect to civil actions brought unde this section.

[(i) In any case in which an employer, employment agency, o labor organization fails to comply with an order of a court issued i a civil action brought under subsection (e), the Commission may com mence proceedings to compel compliance with such order.

[(j) Any civil action brought under subsection (e) and any pro ceedings brought under subsection (i) shall be subject to appeal as pro vided in sections 1291 and 1292, title 28, United States Code.

[(k) In any action or proceeding under this title the court, in it discretion, may allow the prevailing party, other than the Commis sion or the United States, a reasonable attorney's fee as part of th osts, and the Commission and the United States shall be liable for osts the same as a private person.]

PREVENTION OF UNLAWFUL EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

SEC. 706. (a) The Commission is empowered, as hereinafter pro-ided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unlawful employ-ent practice as set forth in section 703 or 704 of this title.

(b) Whenever a charge is filed by or on behalf of a person claiming be aggrieved, or by a member of the Commission, alleging that an mployer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-anagement committee controlling apprenticeship or other training retraining, including on-the-job training programs has engaged in unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall serve a copy the charge on such employer, employment agency, labor organiza-on, or joint labor-management committee (hereinafter referred to the "respondent") and shall make an investigation thereof. harges shall be in writing and shall contain such information and in such form as the Commission requires. Charges shall not be ade public by the Commission. If the Commission determines after ch investigation that there is no reason to believe that the charge true, it shall dismiss the charge and promptly notify the person aiming to be aggrieved and the respondent of its action. If the Com-ission determines after such investigation that there is reasonable use to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by in-rmal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing id or done during and as a part of such informal endeavors may made public by the Commission, its officers or employees, or used evidence in a subsequent proceeding without the written consent of e persons concerned. Any person who makes public information in olation of this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000 or prisoned not more than one year, or both. The Commission shall ke its determination on reasonable cause as promptly as possible d, so far as practicable, not later than one hundred and twenty days om the filing of the charge or, where applicable under subsection) or (d), from the date upon which the Commission is authorized take action with respect to the charge.

(c) In the case of a charge filed by or on behalf of a person claim-g to be aggrieved alleging an unlawful employment practice oc-rring in a State, or political subdivision of a State, which has a ate or local law prohibiting the unlawful employment practice al-ed and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to ant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal pro-edings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, the Com-ission shall take no action with respect to the investigation of such arge before the expiration of sixty days after proceedings have en commenced under the State or local law: Provided, That such ty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days ring the first year after the effective date of such State or local w. If any requirement for the commencement of such proceedings is posed by a State or local authority other than a requirement of the ing of a written and signed statement of the facts upon which the proceeding is based, the proceeding shall be deemed to have been com menced for the purposes of this subsection at the time such statemen is sent by certified mail to the appropriate State or local authority.

(d) In the case of any charge filed by a member of the Commissio alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State o political subdivision of a State which has a State or local law prohi iting the practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State o local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to inst tute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notic thereof the Commission shall, before taking any action with respect t such charge, notify the appropriate State or local officials and, upo request, afford them a reasonable time, but not less than sixty days Provided, That such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hun dred and twenty days during the first year after the effective date o such State or local law, unless a shorter period is requested, to ac under such State or local law to remedy the practice alleged.

(e) A charge shall be filed within one hundred eighty days after th alleged unlawful employment practice occurred and a copy shall b served upon the person against whom such charge is made as soon a practicable thereafter, except that in a case of an unlawful employ ment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has initiall instituted proceedings with a State or local agency with authority t grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal pro ceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, suc charge shall be filed by the person aggrieved within three hundre days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or wit in thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency ha terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever i earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commissio with the State or local agency.

(f) If the Commission determines after attempting to secure volun tary compliance under subsection (b) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commissio and to the person aggrieved, which determination shall not be reviewa able in any court, the Commission shall issue and cause to be served upon the respondent a complaint stating the facts upon which the allegation of the unlawful employment practice is based, together wit a notice of hearing before the Commission, or a member or agent there of, at a place therein fixed not less than five days after the serving o such complaint. Related proceedings may be consolidated for hearing Any member of the Commission who filed a charge in any case shal not participate in a hearing on any complaint arising out of such charge, except as a witness.

(g) A respondent shall have the right to file an answer to the com plaint against him and with the leave of the Commission, which shal be granted whenever it is reasonable and fair to do so, may amend hi answer at any time. Respondents and the person aggrieved shall be parties and may appear at any stage of the proceedings, with or with out counsel. The Commission may grant such other persons a right to intervene or to file briefs or make oral arguments as amicus curiae or for other purposes, as it considers appropriate. All testimony shal be taken under oath and shall be reduced to writing.

(h) If the Commission finds that the respondent has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons aggrieved by such unlawful employment practice an order requiring the respondent to cease and desist from such unlawful employment practice and to take such affirmative action, including reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice), as will effectuate the policies of this title: Provided, That interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the aggrieved person or persons shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. Such order may further require such respondent to make reports from time to time showing the extent to which he has complied with the order. If the Commission finds that the respondent has not engaged in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons alleged in the complaint to be aggrieved an order dismissing the complaint.

(i) After a charge has been filed and until the record has been filed in a court as hereinafter provided, the proceeding may at any time be ended by agreement between the Commission and the parties for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment practice, approved by the Commission, and the Commission may at any time, upon reasonable notice, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it. An agreement approved by the Commission shall be enforceable under subsection (k) and the provisions of that subsection shall be applicable to the extent appropriate to a proceeding to enforce an agreement.

(j) Findings of fact and orders made or issued under subsection (h) or (i) of this section shall be determined on the record.

(k) The Commission may petition any United States court of appeals within any circuit wherein the unlawful employment practice in question occurred or wherein the respondent resides or transacts business for the enforcement of its order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, and shall file in the court the record in the proceedings as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon such filing, the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon the parties to the proceeding before the Commission, and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein and shall have power to grant such temporary relief, restraining order, or other order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Commission. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its member, or agent, shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to question of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon the filing of the record with it the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

(f) Any party aggrieved by a final order of the Commission granting or denying, in whole or in part, the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in any United States court of appeals in the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question is alleged to have occurred or in which such party resides or transacts business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the Court to the Commission and to the other parties to the proceeding before the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall file in the court the certified record in the proceeding as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall proceed in the same manner as in the case of an application by the Commission under subsection (k), the findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive, and the court shall have the same jurisdiction to grant such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and in like manner to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Commission. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection or subsection (k) shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order of the Commission.

(m) The provisions of the Act entitled "An Act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes", approved March 23, 1932 (47 Stat. 70 et seq.; 29 U.S.C. 101–115), shall not apply with respect to (1) proceedings under subsection (k), (l), or (o) of this section, (2) proceedings under section 707 of this title, or (3) proceedings under section 715 of this title.

(n) The Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by the General Counsel of the Commission.

(o) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve the power of the Commission to grant effective relief in the proceeding the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending its final disposition of such charge, in the United States district court for any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful employment practice concerned is alleged to have been committed, or the judicial district in which the aggrieved person would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful employment practice, but, if the respondent is not found within any such judicial district, such an action may be brought in the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28, United States Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in all cases be considered a judicial district in which such an action might have been brought. Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such injunctive relief or temporary restraining order as it deems just and proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law. Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, except paragraph (a)(2) thereof, shall govern proceedings under this subsection.

SEC. 707. (a) Whenever the Attorney General has reasonable cause to believe that any person or group of persons is engaged in a pattern or practice of resistance to the full enjoyment of any of the rights secured by this title, and that the pattern or practice is of such a nature and is intended to deny the full exercise of the rights herein described, the Attorney General may bring a civil action in the appropriate district court of the United States by filing with it a complaint (1) signed by him (or in his absence the Acting Attorney General), (2) setting forth facts pertaining to such pattern or practice, and (3) requesting such relief, including an application for a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order or other order against the person or persons responsible for such pattern or practice, as he deems necessary to insure the full enjoyment of the rights herein described.

(b) The district courts of the United States shall have and shall exercise jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this section, and in any such proceeding the Attorney General may file with the clerk of such court a request that a court of three judges be convened to hear and determine the case. Such request by the Attorney General shall be accompanied by a certificate that, in his opinion, the case is of general public importance. A copy of the certificate and request for a three-judge court shall be immediately furnished by such clerk to the chief judge of the circuit (or in his absence, the presiding circuit judge of the circuit) in which the case is pending. Upon receipt of such request it shall be the duty of the chief judge of the circuit or the presiding circuit judge, as the case may be, to designate immediately three judges in such circuit, of whom at least one shall be a circuit judge and another of whom shall be a district judge of the court in which the proceeding was instituted, to hear and determine such case, and it shall be the duty of the judges so designated to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited. An appeal from the final judgment of such court will lie to the Supreme Court.

In the event the Attorney General fails to file such a request in any such proceeding, it shall be the duty of the chief judge of the district (or in his absence, the acting chief judge) in which the case is pending immediately to designate a judge in such district to hear and determine the case. In the event that no judge in the district is available to hear and determine the case, the chief judge of the district, or the acting chief judge, as the case may be, shall certify this fact to the chief judge of the circuit (or in his absence, the acting chief judge) who shall then designate a district or circuit judge of the circuit to hear and determine the case.

It shall be the duty of the judge designated pursuant to this section to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.

(c) Any record or paper required by section 709(c) of this title to be preserved or maintained shall be made available for inspection, reproduction, and copying by the Commission, the Attorney General, or his representative, upon demand in writing directed to the person having custody, possession, or control of such record or paper. Unless otherwise ordered by a court of the United States, neither the Commission, the Attorney General, nor his representative shall disclose any record or paper produced pursuant to this title, or any reproduction or copy, except to Congress or any committee thereof, or to a governmental agency, or in the presentation of any case or proceeding before any court or grand jury. The United States district court for the district in which a demand is made or in which a record or paper so demanded is located, shall have jurisdiction to compel by appropriate process the production of such record or paper.

(d) Effective on the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act, the functions of the Attorney General and the Acting Attorney General, as the case may be, under this section shall be transferred to the Commission, together with such personnel, property records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available, or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred to the Commission hereby as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions pursuant to this subsection, and the Commission shall thereafter carry out such functions in the manner set forth in subsections (e) and (f) of this section.

(e) In all suits commenced pursuant to this section prior to the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, proceedings shall continue without abatement, all court orders and decrees shall remain in effect, and the Commission shall be substituted as a party for the United States of America or the Attorney General or Acting Attorney General, as appropriate.

(f) Subsequent to the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, the Commission shall have authority to investigate and act on a charge of a pattern or practice of discrimination, whether filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved or by a member of the Commission: Provided, That all such actions shall be in accordance with the procedures set forth in section 706, including the provisions for enforcement and appellate review contained in subsections (k), (l), (m), and (n) thereof.

EFFECT ON STATE LAWS

SEC. 708. Nothing in this title shall be deemed to exempt or relieve any person from any liability, duty, penalty, or punishment provided by any present or future law of any State or political subdivision of a State, other than any such law which purports to require or permit the doing of any act which would be an unlawful employment practice under this title.

INVESTIGATIONS, INSPECTIONS, RECORDS, STATE AGENCIES

SEC. 709. (a) In connection with any investigation of a charge filed under section 706, the Commission or its designated representative shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purposes of examination, and the right to copy any evidence of any person being investigated or proceeded against that relates to unlawful employment practices covered by this title and is relevant to the charge under investigation.

(b) The Commission may cooperate with State and local agencies charged with the administration of State fair employment practices laws and, with the consent of such agencies, may, for the purpose of carrying out its functions and duties under this title and within the limitation of funds appropriated specifically for such purpose, engage in and contribute to the cost of research and other projects of mutual interest undertaken by such agencies, and utilize the services of such agencies and their employees and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, may [reimburse] pay by advance or reimbursement such agencies and their employees for services rendered to assist the Commission in carrying out this title. In furtherance of such cooperative efforts, the Commission may enter into written agreements with such State or local agencies and such agreements may include provisions under which the Commission shall refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases specified in such agreements [and under which no person may bring a civil action under section 706 in any cases or class of cases so specified,] or under which the Commission shall relieve any person or class of persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed under this section. The Commission shall rescind any such agreement whenever it determines that the agreement no longer serves the interest of effective enforcement of this title.

[(c) Except as provided in subsection (d), every employer, employment agency, and labor organization subject to this title shall (1) make and keep such records relevant to the determinations of whether unlawful employment practices have been or are being committed, (2) preserve such records for such periods, and (3) make such reports therefrom, as the Commission shall prescribe by regulation or order, after public hearing, as reasonable, necessary, or appropriate for the enforcement of this title or the regulations or orders thereunder. The Commission shall, by regulation, require each employer, labor organization, and joint labor-management committee subject to this title which controls an apprenticeship or other training program to maintain such records as are reasonably necessary to carry out the purpose of this title, including, but not limited to, a list of applicants who wish to participate in such program, including the chronological order in which such applications were received, and shall furnish to the Commission, upon request, a detailed description of the manner in which persons are selected to participate in the apprenticeship or other training program. Any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee which believes that the application to it of any regulation or order issued under this section would result in undue hardship may (1) apply to the Commission for an exemption from the application of such regulation or order, or (2) bring a civil action in the United States district court for the district where such records are kept. If the Commission or the court, as the case may be, finds that the application of the regulation or order to the employer, employment agency, or labor organization in question would impose an undue hardship, the Commission or the court, as the case may be, may grant appropriate relief.]

(c) Every employer, employment agency, and labor organization subject to this title shall (1) make and keep such records relevant to the determinations of whether unlawful employment practices have been or are being committed, (2) preserve such records for such periods, and (3) make such reports therefrom as the Commission shall prescribe by regulation or order, after public hearing, as reasonable, necessary, or appropriate for the enforcement of this title or the regulation or orders thereunder. The Commission shall, by regulation, require each employer, labor organization, and joint labor-management committee subject to this title which controls an apprenticeship or other training program to maintain such records as are reasonably necessary to carry out the purpose of this title, including, but not limited to, a list of applicants who wish to participate in such program, including the chronological order in which such applicants were received, and to furnish to the Commission upon request, a detailed description of the manner in which persons are selected to participate in the apprenticeship or other training program. Any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee which believes that the application to it of any regulation or order issued under this section would result in undue hardship may apply to the Commission for an exemption from the application of such regulation or order, and, if such application for an exemption is denied, bring a civil action in the United States district court for the district where such records are kept. If the Commission or the court, as the case may be, finds that the application of the regulation or order to the employer, employment agency, or labor organization in question would impose an undue hardship, the Commission or the court, as the case may be, may grant appropriate relief. If any person required to comply with the provisions of this subsection fails or refuses to do so, the United States district court for the district in which such person is found, resides or transacts business, shall, upon application of the Commission, have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring him to comply.

[(d) The provisions of subsection (c) shall not apply to any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee with respect to matters occurring in any State or political subdivision thereof which has a fair employment practice law during any period in which such employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee is subject to such law, except that the Commission may require such notations on records which such employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee keeps or is required to keep as are necessary because of differences in coverage or methods of enforcement between the State or local law and the provisions of this title. Where an employer is required by Executive Order 10925, issued March 6, 1961, or by any other Executive order prescribing fair employment practices for Government contractors and subcontractors, or by rules or regulations issued thereunder, to file reports relating to his employment practices with any Federal agency or committee, and he is substantially in compliance with such requirements, the Commission shall not require him to file additional reports pursuant to subsection (c) of this section.]

(d) In prescribing requirements pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, the Commission shall consult with other interested State and Federal agencies and shall endeavor to coordinate its requirements with those adopted by such agencies. The Commission shall furnish, upon request and without cost to any State or local agency charged with the administration of a fair employment practice law, information obtained pursuant to subsection (c) of this section from any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee subject to the jurisdiction of such agency. Such information shall be furnished on condition that it not be made public by the recipient agency prior to the institution of a proceeding under State or local law involving such information. If this condition is violated by a recipient agency, the Commission may decline to honor subsequent requests pursuant to this subsection.

(e) It shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of the Commission to make public in any manner whatever any information obtained by the Commission pursuant to its authority under this section prior to the institution of any proceeding under this title involving such information. Any officer or employee of the Commission who shall make public in any manner whatever any information in violation of this subsection shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year.

[INVESTIGATORY POWERS

[SEC. 710. (a) For the purposes of any investigation of a charge filed under the authority contained in section 706, the Commission shall have authority to examine witnesses under oath and to require the production of documentary evidence relevant or material to the charge under investigation.

[(b) If the respondent named in a charge filed under section 706 fails or refuses to comply with a demand of the Commission for permission to examine or to copy evidence in conformity with the provisions of section 709(a), or if any person required to comply with the provisions of section 709 (c) or (d) fails or refuses to do so, or if any person fails or refuses to comply with a demand by the Commission to give testimony under oath, the United States district court for the district in which such person is found, resides, or transacts business, shall, upon application of the Commission, have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring him to comply with the provisions of section 709 (c) or (d) or to comply with the demand of the Commission, but the attendance of a witness may not be required outside the State where he is found, resides, or transacts business and the production of evidence may not be required outside the State where such evidence is kept.

[(c) Within twenty days after the service upon any person charged under section 706 of a demand by the Commission for the production of documentary evidence or for permission to examine or to copy evidence in conformity with the provisions of section 709(a), such person may file in the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which he resides, is found, or transacts business, and serve upon the Commission a petition for an order of such court modifying or setting aside such demand. The time allowed for compliance with the demand in whole or in part as deemed proper and ordered by the court shall not run during the pendency of such petition in the court. Such petition shall specify each ground upon which the petitioner relies in seeking such relief, and may be based upon any failure of such demand to comply with the provisions of this title or with the limitations generally applicable to compulsory process or upon any constitutional or other legal right or privilege of such person. No objection which is not raised by such a petition may be urged in the defense to proceeding initiated by the Commission under subsection (b) for enforcement of such a demand unless such proceeding is commenced by the Commission prior to the expiration of the twenty-day period, or unless the court determines that the defendant could not reasonably have been aware of the availability of such ground of objection.

[(d) In any proceeding brought by the Commission under subsection (b), except as provided in subsection (c) of this section, the defendant may petition the court for an order modifying or setting aside the demand of the Commission.]

INVESTIGATORY POWERS

SEC. 710. For the purpose of all hearings and investigations conducted by the Commission or its duly authorized agents or agencies, section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (49 Stat. 455; 29 U.S.C. 161) shall apply: Provided, That no subpena shall be issued on the application of any party to proceedings before the Commission until after the Commission has issued and caused to be served upon the respondent a complaint and notice of hearing under subsection (f) of section 706.

NOTICES TO BE POSTED

SEC. 711. (a) Every employer, employment agency, and labor organization, as the case may be, shall post and keep posted in conspicuous places upon its premises where notices to employees, applicants for employment, and members are customarily posted a notice to be prepared or approved by the Commission setting forth excerpts from or, summaries of, the pertinent provisions of this title and information pertinent to the filing of a complaint.

(b) A willful violation of this section shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $100 for each separate offense.

VETERANS' PREFERENCE

SEC. 712. Nothing contained in this title shall be construed to repeal or modify any Federal, State, territorial, or local law creating special rights or preference for veterans.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 713. (a) The Commission shall have authority from time to time to issue, amend, or rescind suitable procedural regulations to carry out the provisions of this title. Regulations issued under this section shall be in conformity with the standards and limitations of the Administrative Procedure Act.

(b) In any action or proceeding based on any alleged unlawful employment practice, no person shall be subject to any liability or punishment for or on account of (1) the commission by such person of an unlawful employment practice if he pleads and proves that the act or omission complained of was in good faith, in conformity with, and in reliance on any written interpretation or opinion of the Commission, or (2) the failure of such person to publish and file any information required by any provision of this title if he pleads and proves that he failed to publish and file such information in good faith, in conformity with the instructions of the Commission issued under this title regarding the filing of such information. Such a defense, if established, shall be a bar to the action or proceeding, notwithstanding that (A) after such act or omission, such interpretation or opinion is modified or rescinded or is determined by judicial authority to be invalid or of no legal effect, or (B) after publishing or filing the description and annual reports, such publication or filing is determined by judicial authority not to be in conformity with the requirements of this title.

(c) Except for the powers granted to the Commission under subsection (h) of section 706, the power to modify or set aside its findings, or make new findings, under subsections (i) and (k) of section 706, the rulemaking power as defined in subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, with reference to general rule as distinguished from rules of specific applicability, and the power to enter into or rescind agreements with State and local agencies, as provided in subsection (b) of section 709, under which the Commission agrees to refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases or under which the Commission agrees to relieve any person or class of persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed by section 709, the Commission may delegate any of its functions, duties, and powers to such person or persons as the Commission may designate by regulation, including functions, duties, and powers with respect to investigating, conciliating, hearing, determining, ordering, certifying, reporting or otherwise acting as to any work, business, or matter: Provided, That nothing in this subsection authorizes the Commission to provide for persons other than those referred to in clauses (2) and (3) of subsection (b) of section 556 of title 5 of the United States Code to conduct any hearing to which that section applies.

(d) The Commission is authorized to delegate to any group of three or more members of the Commission any or all of the powers which it may itself exercise.

FORCIBLY RESISTING THE COMMISSION OR ITS REPRESENTATIVES

CIVIL ACTIONS BY PERSONS AGGRIEVED

SEC. 715. (a) If (1) the Commission determines that there is no reasonable cause to believe the charge is true and dismisses the charge in accordance with section 706(b), (2) finds no probable jurisdiction and dismisses the charge, or (3) within one hundred and eighty days after a charge is filed with the Commission, or within one hundred and eighty days after expiration of any period of reference under section 706 (c) or (d), the Commission has not either (i) issued a complaint in accordance with section 706(f), (ii) determined that there is no reasonable cause to believe the charge is true and dismissed the charge in accordance with section 706(b) or found no probable jurisdiction and dismissed the charge, or (iii) entered into a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved in accordance with section 706(f) or an agreement with the parties in accordance with section 706(i), the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and within sixty days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such harge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom he charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment ractice. Upon application by the complaintant and in such circumtances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney or such complaintant and may authorize the commencement of the tion without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely pplication, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Commission intervene in such civil action if it certifies that the case is of geral public importance. Upon the commencement of such civil action, he Commission shall be divested of jurisdiction over the proceeding nd shall take no further action with respect thereof: Provided, That, pon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings r not more than sixty days pending termination of State or local roceedings described in subsection (c) or (d) or the efforts of the ommission to obtain voluntary compliance.

(b) Each United States district court and each United States court a place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have risdiction of actions brought under this section. Such an action may brought in any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful nployment practice is alleged to have been committeed, or in the dicial district in which the plaintiff would have been employed but r the alleged unlawful employment practice, but if the respondent not found within any such district, such an action may be brought ithin the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal fice. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28 of the United ates Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his prinpal office shall in all cases be considered a district in which the action ight have been brought. Upon the bringing of any such action, the strict court shall have jurisdiction to grant such temporary or preminary relief as it deems just and proper.

(c) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice arged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from gaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such firmative action as may be appropriate, which may include reintement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case ay be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice). Interim rnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the backpay herwise allowable. No order of the court shall require the admission reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union or the hiring, instatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the yment to him of any backpay, if such individual was refused admisn, suspended, or expelled or was refused employment or advancent or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than scrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in violation of section 704(a).

(d) In any case in which an employer, employment agency, or labor ganization fails to comply with an order of a court issued in a civil tion brought under subsection (a), the Commission may commence roceedings to compel compliance with such order.

(e) Any civil action brought under subsection (a) and any proceed ings brought under subsection (d) shall be subject to appeal as pr vided in sections 1291 and 1292, title 28, United States Code.

(f) In any action or proceeding under this section, the court, in i discretion, may allow the prevailing plaintiff a reasonable attorney fee as part of the costs.

MINORITY VIEWS ON H.R. 1746

We all agree that, if equal employment opportunity for all Amer cans is to become a reality, the Equal Employment Opportunit Commission should be given enforcement powers. We are convince however, that H.R. 1746 will not accomplish this goal, and thus w must oppose it.

First and foremost, on the premise that anyone charged with viola ing the law is innocent until proven guilty, we believe that enforce ment of our laws can best be effectuated through our courts.

Additionally, we fear that, in view of the estimated 18-month t two-year backlog that currently exists at the EEOC, the intent o H.R. 1746 to expand the EEOC's jurisdiction will serve only to retar and frustrate the purposes and objectives of the Equal Employmen Opportunity Act.

Under the procedures of the Committee bill, upon receipt of charge, the Commission is required to investigate and to find reason able cause before issuing a formal complaint. In effect, this finding is presumption of the guilt of the defendant, which subtly shifts th burden of proof from the plaintiff to the defendant. Thus, in practice if not by law, the defendant is faced with the burden of proving hi innocence.

During Committee sessions, we offered amendments to assure tha title VII of the Civil Rights Act would be enforced, and that enforce ment would be fair and impartial. Our amendments, which were re jected, would permit the EEOC attorneys, if they are unsuccessful i their conciliation and if they found reasonable cause to believe that violation of the law has taken place, to seek enforcement in Federa district courts.

I. The Major Issue

As indicated above, the most significant issue that separates th majority of the committee from the minority is not whether the EEO should be given enforcement authority. Rather, the issue is: What pro cedures will insure the most effective enforcement of the substantiv provisions of title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

By providing the EEOC with authority to issue cease and desist an other remedial orders, the Committee bill would transform this agency into a quasi-judicial body very similar to the National Labor Rela tions Board.

In the next section we explain and justify our belief that the cour approach will be more effective and more expeditious than the admin istrative approach. We are compelled, however, to point out as wel that the authority provided in H.R. 1746 ignores and denies basi American principles.

Under our system of justice, a person charged with violating the aw is presumed innocent until proved guilty. In practical effect the 'ommittee bill creates a system that presumes persons charged with ertain law violations are guilty until proved innocent. We contend hat the EEOC has attained an image as an advocate of civil rights, nd properly so. For this very reason, we submit that it cannot be an mpartial arbiter of the law. An advocate, by nature, represents one ide of an issue. How can he then be asked to apply the law without rejudice?

THE JUDICIAL APPROACH

The direct judicial approach offers greater advantages than the administrative cease and desist approach. While both methods would involve an adversary proceeding before a finder of fact, in the judicial pproach the original finder of fact would be the federal district court udge as compared to a hearing officer who is a civil service employee, nder the administrative approach.

There are substantial reasons for supporting direct resort to the ourts. They include:

. Timeliness of Relief and Remedy

Contrary to the proponents of the "cease and desist" approach, the istrict court approach is clearly preferable because relief can be more uickly granted. The pertinent yardstick is the amount of time an aggrieved person must wait before he is afforded relief. Empowering the EOC to bring court suits will greatly facilitate its ability to implement the law without delay and to bring effective relief to victims of iscrimination. If the EEOC prevails before the court, it is entitled an immediate injunction and other relief to bring about a rapid end the discriminatory practices. In many instances a relatively simple roof would allow the EEOC to obtain a preliminary injunction pending a full trial of the case.

A close examination of the time factors involved in processing harges before the National Labor Relations Board (which was the odel for formulating the enforcement powers given to the EEOC by he Committee bill) and the district courts conclusively establishes hat quicker relief can be achieved when the direct court approach is ilized.

It is significant that the Special Subcommittee on Labor opened earings on May 6, 1971, on a bill (H.R. 7152) to expedite the processes of the National Labor Relations Board, and in the explanatory heet it distributed it discussed the delay incurred in the six stages of he administrative process which culminated in a court enforced order the Court of Appeals. The delay was summarized as follows:

> In sum, it can easily take 2½ years from the time a worker walks into a regional Labor Board office with a charge that he has been discharged illegally until the time a court of appeals finally issues an order that he be reinstated to his job with back pay.

Even the 2½ year figure cited appears unduly optimistic in light of cent testimony given before the Special Subcommittee on Labor on

H.R. 7152, on May 12, 1971, by Frank W. McCulloch, former Chairman of the NLRB, about the length of delay between the issuance of a Board decision and a court order. He stated:

> In operation, the lack of such a provision [referring to a self-enforcing provision] has resulted in the build-up of a median time interval of 630 days in enforcement cases, as previously noted, from Board decision to a Court order which for the first time applies the sanctions of the law to a non-complying respondent.

When these time factors are added up, the 18–24 month backlog currently existing at EEOC, the time needed for an administrative proceeding and review by the Commission, plus the 630 day figure currently required to get court enforcement (using the NLRB figure) 3½ to 4 years would appear to be a more correct approximation of the time involved in getting enforcement through the administrative cease and desist approach.

In striking contrast, the 1970 Annual Report of the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts states that ten months was the median time interval from issue to trial for non-jury trials completed in United States District Courts in 1970. Even assuming time for issuance of a decision such forum would clearly be quicker. Moreover, the district courts located in those states which have most of the charges of employment discrimination often have better time records in case handling.

An examination of the Fourth Annual Report of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, submitted on July 30, 1970, shows that the top ten states in terms of the number of charges of employment discrimination recommended for investigation are: Texas (1232 charges), Louisiana (1007), Florida (1000), Alabama (734), Tennessee (672), California (546), Georgia (519), Pennsylvania (501), Illinois (354) and New Jersey (306). As federal district courts in such metropolitan areas as New York City and Philadelphia would obviously be much busier than those in less populolus areas, the case handling time factor should therefore, be correlated with the areas where most charges originate.

The median time interval in months for non-jury trials in such states discloses the following:

Texas:

Northern District, 4 months, Dallas.
Eastern District, 5 months, Beaumont.
Southern District, 12 months, Houston.
Western District, 3 months, San Antonio.

Louisiana:

Eastern District, 13 months, New Orleans.
Western District, 13 months, Shreveport.

Florida:

Northern District, 8 months [1], Tallahassee.
Middle District, 12 months, Jacksonville.
Southern District, 9 months, Miami.

[1] Jury and non-jury trials total.

Alabama:
Northern District, 8 months, Birmingham.
Middle District, 3 months,[1] Montgomery.
Southern District, 11 months, Mobile.
Tennessee:
Eastern District, 4 months, Knoxville.
Middle District [2], Nashville.
Western District, 8 months, Memphis.
California:
Northern District, 23 months, San Francisco.
Eastern District, 21 months,[1] Sacramento.
Central District, 10 months, Los Angeles.
Southern District [3], San Diego.
Georgia:
Northern District, 4 months, Atlanta.
Middle District, 4 months, Macon.
Southern District, 1 month, Savannah.
Pennsylvania:
Eastern District, 36 months, Philadelphia.
Middle District, 21 months [1], Scranton.
Western District, 12 months, Pittsburgh.
Illinois:
Northern District, 11 months, Chicago.
Eastern District, 12 months [1] East St. Louis.
Southern District, 11 months [1], Peoria.
New Jersey: 1 month, Newark.

Of the 29 district courts represented in the above statistics, 21 courts d a median time of 12 months or less; 8 courts had median trial mpletion times of 6 months or less.

In hearings last April before the House Committee on Appropria-ns, discussing the EEOC budget request for FY 1971, Chairman rown noted that EEOC's backlog "now means an average delay of months to 2 years before the Commission can complete action on omplaint." How much longer would this interval be extended if at e end thereof, the Commission then had to begin its administrative oceedings followed by resort to the appellate courts? In his testi-ny before the General Subcommittee on Labor recently, Chairman own noted that "during the first seven and a half months of this scal Year, 14,644 charges were filed with the Commission, a number ater than the number received in all of last Fiscal Year." (Em-asis supplied.) He also stated that as of February 20, 1971, the klog of charges pending before the Commission numbered 25,195. The increased caseload and backlog of EEOC alone not only under-nes but clearly refutes the contention that the administrative proc-would bring quicker relief. Add to this backlog the increased work-d that would be generated by the additional jurisdiction bestowed EEOC by the Committee bill (jurisdiction over state and local employees, transfer of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance t EEOC, transfer of pattern and practice suits to EEOC from th Justice Department, transfer of authority over discrimination among federal employees to EEOC from the Civil Service Commission, juris diction extended to employers with 8 employees as compared to th present 25 employee limitation) conclusively establishes that claim of quicker remedies through the administrative "cease and desist process are more fiction than fact.

Finally, we suggest that a further impediment to timely action is presented by virtue of the fact that under the administrative approach the decision to grant relief can be made only by the Commission. An EEOC attorney in the field could investigate, and he could attempt conciliation; but there would be only one facility available to issue a cease and desist order—the Commission in Washington. Through the judicial approach, EEOC attorneys would have access to our 93 Fed eral district courts for enforcement.

It seems eminently more sensible to us to proceed in a forum where not only can preliminary relief be made available at the outset, but, if circumstances warrant, further relief can be obtained as the case pro ceeds, with permanent relief embodied in a self-enforcing decree issu ing at the culmination of trial. Thus we will have avoided the multi plicity of opportunities for delay that are inherent in the cease-and-desist approach, and aggrieved parties will have their remedy at the earliest possible moment.

This alternative saves the best features of the independent agency approach—expertise and political autonomy—while avoiding the problems that arise when an active enforcement stance must be accom modated within a structure that contemplates quasi-judicial neutrali ty. The problem title VII seeks to correct is not one susceptible to the kind of policy balancing that is usual in the administration of law regulating utilities or other situations involving competing interests.
Racial discrimination does not occupy the status of an "interest" under our system of law. It is a grave injustice which should be eliminated in as quick and efficient a manner as possible.

B. Greater Prestige of Federal Judges

The appropriate forum to resolve civil rights questions, questions of employment discrimination as well as such matters as public accom modations, school desegregation, fair housing, and voting rights, is a court. Civil rights issues usually arouse strong emotions. United States district court proceedings provide procedural safeguards: Federal judges are well known in their areas and enjoy great respect; the forum is convenient for the litigants and is impartial; the proceedings are public, and the judge has power to resolve the problem and fashion a complete remedy.

C. Evidentiary Matters

The district court approach has a great advantage over an adminis trative hearing procedure in securing the needed evidence. The Fed eral Rules of Civil Procedure with respect to discovery, would greatly facilitate the collection of evidence for trial. Under a cease and desist approach, the rather cumbersome method of enforcing subpoenas se verely inhibits the acquisition of evidence for trial, making the hearing very dependent upon the investigation. Experience has shown that investigations, which are aimed simply at developing enough evidence to find reasonable cause, fall short of providing adequate evidence for obtaining a decision where the standard, as it is in the courts, is a preponderance of evidence on the record. Discovery procedures take less time than administrative fact-gathering techniques, and the contempt powers of the court operate to inhibit any intimidation of witnesses, which is a rather difficult problem that is often real, but seldom apparent.

II. Detrimental Provisions and Critical Omissions in the Committee Bill

A. As elaborated or hereafter, we conclude that those provisions in the Committee bill dealing with the transfer of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance (OFCC), the extension of EEOC jurisdiction to state and local employees, and the transfer of pattern and practice suits from the Justice Department to the EEOC are detrimental to the major objective of this bill, which is to provide an enforcement power to effectuate appropriate and timely remedies for discriminatory employment conditions.

1. Section 11 of the Committee bill would transfer the function of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance under Executive Order 11246 from the Department of Labor to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. We oppose this transfer because: OFCC has made commendable progress in achieving the Executive Order's goal of equal employment opportunity by government contractors; the transfer would create a hiatus in the administration of these crucial programs and add an insurmountable administrative burden to an already overburdened agency; and the administration of the programs will prove unworkable because the EEOC would be assuming dual role of contract compliance and the regulatory function of processing complaints of employment discrimination.

OFCC is charged with the administration of the nondiscrimination and affirmative action provisions of the Executive Order which relate to Federal contractors and Federally-assisted construction contractors. We feel that this function falls logically within the Department of Labor. The present location of OFCC permits it to benefit directly from the experience gained by the Labor Department in the administration of other workplace standards and anti-discrimination programs which are enforced by similar sanctions as well as its general expertise in labor-management relations. The Department also includes the Manpower Administration, thus making it possible for OFCC to include job training efficiently in the development of useful affirmative action programs.

While OFCC and EEOC share the goal of promoting the civil rights of minority workers, the programs they are presently administering are considerably different. EEOC acts, following an individual complaint, to redress instances of actual job discrimination. OFCC works with Government contractors to insure equal employment opportunity. The merging of these two distinct functions in a single agency will create serious problems, and such combination will undoubtedly work to the detriment of both programs. Incidentally, it should be pointed out, that once EEOC is given enforcement powers, federal contractors will be, just as other employers, subject to the processes and remedies of the EEOC in addition to those exercised by OFCC.

The EEOC presently has a tremendous backlog of pending charges. The addition of some form of enforcement powers will greatly increase its administrative responsibilities. We feel that it is simply unrealistic to expect EEOC simultaneously to shoulder the burden of OFCC's program. If the Committee's bill is enacted, we foresee a significant disruption of the compliance program. Regarding such transfer Chairman Brown of the EEOC appeared before the General Subcommittee on Labor and stated:

> Given the tremendous backlog of charges pending now with the Commission—25,195 as of February 20, 1971—the additioanl work which would have to be undertaken by the Commission if it gets enforcement powers, the difficulty of obtaining adequate funding for the Commission, and finally, the tremendous administrative difficulties embodied in such a transfer, I am doubtful as to the desirability of transferring OFCC at this time. Specifically, the administrative difficulties are by far the greatest in my view; almost insurmountable.

The primary responsibility for the implementation of the Executive Order as it relates to government procurement rests and must remain, with the individual Executive agencies. The coordination of the goals of equal employment opportunity with the needs of these agencies to obtain goods and services can be most effectively accomplished from within the Executive Branch of Government. Indeed, the experience of the various Presidential Committees formerly charged with the compliance program indicates the inherent difficulties in placing the operations of the agencies under the control of a separate body, such as the EEOC.

2. The Extension of Coverage to State and Local Employees. Apart from adding to the EEOC's already swollen workload which is treated in more detail in other portions of this report, we believe this area helps substantiate our earlier conclusion that the Federal courts are the proper forum. If its jurisdiction is thus extended, we will have the anomaly of a federal administrative agency interposing itself in the internal administration of state and local government. The NLRB does not have such jurisdiction over employees of state and local governments in matters involving discrimination in employment and we see no justification for extending such jurisdiction to the EEOC. It would be inconsistent with our system of division of governmental powers to subject state and local authorities to the cease-and-desist power of a federal commission.

3. Transfer of Pattern and Practice Suits to EEOC. We oppose the provisions of the Committee bill which would transfer from the Department of Justice to the EEOC the authority to try pattern and practice suits because it involves not only the transfer of authority from one agency to another, but also the elimination of the judicial remedies now provided by Section 707 of the Civil Rights Act. It will unquestionably hinder the achievement of equal employment opportunity. In effect, the Committee bill, will merely delay the achievement of any remedy to groups of discriminatees by interposing yet another obstacle, the additional forum of the EEOC, which after reaching its conclusion in such matters, under its hearing and cease and desist procedures, must ultimately petition a Federal Circuit Court of Appeals for enforcement. Certainly, it is in this area, that suits are frequently initiated as class actions because of the numbers of employees involved and the amounts of backpay due, which will usually require the authority of a Court enforced decree.

Between July, 1965, when title VII took effect and April 2, 1971, the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice filed some 60 suits on the basis of Section 707. The Division has had a high degree of success in litigating these cases, and principles established in them, at the trial or appellate level, have been useful to complaining private litigants and to other federal agencies. Six Circuit Courts have rendered decisions favorable to the Division's position and to date the Division has prevailed in each pattern and practice suit that has come to final decision. Such a record warrants a retention of pattern and practice suits in the Department of Justice. Some of the reasons for its success are the fact that it has access to the investigative resources of the Federal Bureau of Investigation—resources which have proved invaluable in ascertaining the facts and marshaling them for evidence in pattern or practice suits. Moreover, the United States Attorneys, who are the Department's field representatives located in every judicial district in the nation, have a thorough knowledge of local situations and are in a position to render valuable counsel and assistance.

4. Recovery of Court Costs Limited to "Prevailing Plaintiff." Under existing law, the Court has the discretion to allow the "prevailing party" a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs for litigation proceeding under this title. The Committee bill eliminated the term "prevailing party" and substitutes the term "prevailing plaintiff". No justification for such change was presented in hearings on the bill; it is contrary to the rule in most jurisdictions; and it may constitute an incentive for harassment suits and a "disincentive" to respondents not to resist ill-founded claims.

B. Critical Omissions of the Committee Bill. At the subcommittee and committee levels, we attempted to amend the Committee bill because it lacked certain procedural and due process safeguards. These deficiencies include: failure to provide for a reasonable statute of limitations on backpay; failure to provide for service of a charge on the named respondent within a reasonable time; failure to provide that title VII, as amended, shall be the exclusive remedy. We believe these omissions are critical and should be called to the attention of the House for we expect to make further attempts on the House floor to provide minimal due process standards in the Committee bill.

1. Statute of Limitations. Under the Committee bill, the time period in which individual charges of employment discrimination must be filed has been extended from 90 days to 180 days from the date of the alleged discriminatory conduct; this is identical to the statute of limitations under the National Labor Relations Act. We concur in such extension. However, testimony in the hearings indicates that pattern or practice suits now brought by the Justice Department are not subject to such limitation. Civil suits in most jurisdiction are subject to statutes of limitations ranging usually between two or three years. Under existing law, recovery of backpay in such pattern or practice suits can extend back to 1965, the effective date of enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Thus potential respondents whether they be employers, labor organizations or employment agencies may be subject to enormous monetary penalties in the absence of a definite limitation. To avoid the litigation of stale charges and to preclude respondents from being subject to indefinite liabilities, it is clear that a precise statute of limitations is needed. In view of the tremendous backlog currently existing at the EEOC, and the failure to require a prompt serving of the charge on named respondents as discussed hereafter, equitable principles require a limitation on liability.

Our amendment, which failed by a tie vote, inserted language which provided that no order shall include backpay or liability which accrued more than two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commission. In view of the equitable principles on which such amendment is based, it is deserving of bipartisan support.

2. Service of the Charge. At the hearings of this bill, it was brought out that in most cases, employers were not notified about the filing of a charge until months later, not uncommonly a year or more. As the Committee bill failed to remedy this problem, we sought to amend it to require service on the named respondent within 5 days after the filing of a charge. In the discussion that ensued it was emphasized that the 5 day figure was not a magic number and that any reasonable time period would be acceptable. Nevertheless, the Committee rejected the 5 day requirement and no reasonable alternative was offered.

It seems patent that failure to require timely notice violates all concepts of due process. Under the National Labor Relations Act, a charge is not deemed effectively filed for purposes of the 6 months statute of limitation until service of a copy of the charge on the respondent. In view of specific abuses regarding service of charges under title VII, a specific requirement for service on the respondent within a specified time period (5 to 7 days) is a prerequisite to maintaining minimum standards of due process.

3. Failure to Make Title VII an Exclusive Federal Remedy. Despite the enactment of title VII of the Civil Rights Act, charges of discriminatory employment conditions may still be brought under prior existing federal statutes such as the National Labor Relations Act and the Civil Rights Act of 1866. In view of the comprehensive prohibitions against discrimination contained in title VII, and the intent of the Committee bill to consolidate procedures and remedies under one agency, it would be consistent to make title VII the exclusive remedy. No public interest is served in continuing to permit a multiplicity of statutes or forums to deal with discrimination in employment. However, our attempt to amend the Committee bill to make title VII an exclusive remedy (except for pattern or practice suits) was rejected. In our view, the failure to make this an exclusive remedy merely encourages an individual who has lost his case in one forum under one statute to relitigate his case in still another forum under another federal statute. Under NLRB procedures and the proposed EEOC procedures, the burden as well as the cost of prosecuting charges is borne by the respective agencies, and therefore, the taxpayer.

CONCLUSIONS

In essence, the Committee bill will result in interposing an additional obstacle in the nature of an administrative forum, between the aggrieved party and the effective judicial relief which can be achieved by a court enforced order. For the reasons previously documented, direct judicial relief can be obtained more quickly and thus more effectively through the federal district courts.

Secondly, and equally as important, the massive expansion of jurisdiction and the transferring of various programs to the EEOC at a time when the agency is struggling to control a burgeoning backlog of cases, will further hamstring efforts to bring meaningful and timely relief to persons aggrieved by discriminatory employment conditions. At a time when Congress should be directing its efforts solely to helping the EEOC become a more effective agency by giving it access to judicial enforcement, the committee bill represents a step backward and will thrust the EEOC into an administrative quagmire which can only delay the attainment of a reasonable standard of operational efficiency that Congress should expect and demand.

Lastly, the failure of the committee bill to include such minimal due process requirements as the prompt notification to named respondents, a reasonable statute of limitations as to backpay and other liability, and failure to make this an exclusive remedy, are critical omissions whose inclusion we deem vital to meet due process standards.

SEPARATE VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVE GREEN OF OREGON

I should like to dissent to one provision in the bill.

The new section 717(f), in connection with the transfer of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance to the EEOC, provides that all authority, functions and responsibilities vested in the Secretary of Labor pursuant to Executive Order 11246 relating to nondiscrimination in employment by government contractors and subcontractors and nondiscrimination in federally assisted construction contracts are transferred to the EEOC . . . and the Commissioner shall hereafter carry out all such authority, functions, and responsibilities pursuant to such order.

The EEOC will operate under two authorities—Executive Order 11246 as adopted by subsection (f), and Congressional enactment amended title VII of the Civil Rights Act. Those authorities are divergent in important ways. For example:

(1) Under title VII an individual may sue the offending party after his complaint has been with the EEOC for 60 days.

Under the Executive Order an individual may not sue but may seek debarment of the contract.

(2) Under title VII, EEOC can initiate an investigation only after the filing of a discrimination complaint. The company is entitled to judicial review if it should feel that the investigation is unwarranted.

Under the Executive Order contract review can be conducted at will. A decision to investigate is not subject to judicial review.

(3) Under Title VII EEOC is specifically prohibited from public disclosure of a complaint.

Under the Executive Order there is authority to publish the names of persons accused of discrimination.

(4) Under title VII (Sec. 703(j)) EEOC is expressly prohibited from imposing racial quota requirements.

Under the Executive Order there is authority to require an affirmative action plan including the imposition of racial quotas. In my view, the Philadelphia plan is such a quota plan.

These contradictions place the EEOC in the intolerable situation of being compelled to select between contradictory expressions of Congressional intent. It is unreasonable to ask the EEOC to decide which intention we really mean.

I am particularly concerned that the EEOC may decide that it can under the Executive Order authority, impose racial quotas which it is forbidden to do under direct Congressional statute. Such artificial quotas, unrelated to competence, are a distortion of civil rights and a disservice to our working people. Personal rights are individual rights, and the imposition of quotas infringes on them.

In our committee consideration of the bill, I offered an amendment for the single purpose of removing the contradiction. It would have made the present authority of title VII of the Civil Rights Act take precedence in any conflict situation. The EEOC deserves such guidance.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVE MAZZOLI

I favor equal employment opportunity for all Americans and support all realistic legislative measures directed toward this goal. However, because of significant provisions contained in, and omitted from, the Committee version of H.R. 1746, I cannot support this legislation in the form in which it has been reported. It requires major amendment in order to become, in my opinion, realistic and appropriate legislation to end job discrimination.

My objections to H.R. 1746 conform generally to the objections raised in the Minority Views printed in this Report.

Basically, I prefer the stability, expedition and protection to plaintiff and defendant alike offered by judicial enforcement of equal employment rights over the administrative cease and desist approach contained in H.R. 1746.

I also prefer that a choice of remedies be incorporated into this legislation. A multiplicity of remedies and of forums, except in pattern and practice suits, is inconsistent with the intent of this legislation which is to consolidate and coordinate all efforts to eliminate discrimination in employment.

There ought also, in my opinion, to be a two-year statute of limitations incorporated into H.R. 1746. I concur with the Minority Views on this matter as set forth elsewhere in this Report.

Likewise, I concur in the conclusion and the reasoning of the minority in opposing the shift of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance to the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission.

On these groups and on others, most of which are discussed in the Minority Views printed in this Report, I cannot support the Committee version of H.R. 1746, and will support amendments or substitutes thereto.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVES JOHN M. ASHBROOK AND EARL F. LANDGREBE

We generally agree with the views expressed in the Minority report. However, we do not conclude as they do that the EEOC should be given enforcement authority.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVE REID OF NEW YORK

Since 1965, I have authored, supported, and fought for legislation to strengthen the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission by giving it cease and desist powers. In 1965, such a bill passed the House and in 1970 a similar measure was approved by the Senate. I very much hope that in 1971 both houses of the Congress will agree that the right to equal employment opportunity is dependent upon a strong EEOC with judicially enforceable cease and desist powers.

The Commission's powers under present law are limited to conciliation and it is apparent that this authority is grossly inadequate to obtain meaningful action in the cases before it. Reasonable cause has been found in 63 percent of the 27,000 cases brought before the EEOC and recommended for investigation between 1965 and 1970. But in only less than half of these cases was the Commission able to achieve a totally or even partially successful conciliation.

Based on my experience as Chairman of the New York State Commission for Human Rights in 1961 and 1962, I deeply believe that only cease and desist powers will give the EEOC the strength it needs to be effective. Redress through the courts, instead of cease and desist powers, will not be as effective, will not be as expeditious, and will not result in prompt equal employment opportunity for all Americans.

H.R. 1746 also expands the jurisdiction of EEOC to cover state and local government employees and to cover employers and labor unions with 8 or more employees or members instead of the present 25, and transfers equal employment functions of the Civil Service Commission to the EEOC. These amendments fill a critical need and they will make the protection of a strong Federal law available to government workers in almost 20 states which lack meaningful legislation in this field.

Transfers of authority to the EEOC from the Civil Service Commission, the Department of Labor (in the case of Federal contract compliance) and the Department of Justice (in the case of pattern or practice discrimination suits) will centralize the equal employment functions of the Federal government. Hopefully, this will result in a more vigorous pursuit of these rights than now is the case by certain these agencies. In particular, adequate staff and resources must be ovided to the EEOC to handle its increased responsibilities. Otherise, these transfers of authority will have the effect of reduced, rather an strengthened, compliance. This is especially important with reard to the transfer of Federal Contract Compliance pursuant to xecutive Order 11246 from the Department of Labor to EEOC.

Equal employment opportunity legislation with effective enforceent is now the law in over 30 states. Support for this bill is nationide among educational, religious, civic, labor, and civil rights groups. know of no black, Spanish-American, Chicano, American Indian, or omen's organization that does not totally support cease and desist wers. Indeed, the most persistent opposition to cease and desist mes from those who do not really want the Federal government to force effectively the right of all Americans to equal employment portunity now.

The plain hard fact of the matter is that we should have enacted this ll in 1965, instead of wasting six years conjuring up legal niceties to ade our constitutional responsibilities. To delay still longer the actment of cease and desist powers for the EEOC would be a grave reliction of duty by the Congress. To dilute this legislation by the bstitution of authority weaker and less effective than cease and sist would be a callous and empty gesture and a cynical failure to lfill a right due all Americans regardless of color or sex.

Finally, I hope that the Rules Committee, unlike its past performce, will grant a rule for H.R. 1746 promptly so that Members will ve a chance to debate and vote on the bill. Amendments will doubtss be offered on the Floor to weaken this legislation, and I hope that l Members will join in defeating them. Justice demands nothing less.

92D CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 6760

MARCH 25, 1971

Mr. ERLENBORN (for himself, Mr. QUIE, Mr. BELL, Mr. DELLENBACK, Mr. ESCH, Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin, Mr. HANSEN of Idaho, Mr. FORSYTHE, and Mr. VEYSEY) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor

A BILL

To further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1971".

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (6) of subsection (g) of section 705 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-4(f)(6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to refer matters to the Attorney General with recommendations for intervention in a civil action brought by an aggrieved party under section 706, or for the institution of a civil action by the Attorney General under section 707, and to recommend institution of appellate proceedings in accordance with subsection (h) of this section, when in the opinion of the Commission such proceedings would be in the public interest, and to advise, consult, and assist the Attorney General in such matters.

(b) Subsection (h) of such section 705 is amended to read as follows:

"(h) Attorneys appointed under this section may, at the direction of the Commission, appear for and represent the Commission in any case in court, provided that the Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court or in the courts of appeals of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by the Commission."

SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (a) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whenever it is charged in writing under oath by a person claiming to be aggrieved, or a written charge has been filed by a member of the Commission where he has reasonable cause to believe a violation of this title has occurred (and such charge sets forth the facts upon which it is based and the person or persons aggrieved) that an employer, employment agency or labor organization has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission, within 5 days thereafter, shall furnish such employer, employment agency, or labor organization (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') with a copy of such charge and shall make an investigation of such charge, provided that such charge shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission shall determine, after such investigation, that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such endeavors may be made public by the Commission without the written consent of the parties, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding. Any officer or employee of the Commission, who shall make public in any manner whatever any information in violation of this subsection shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year.

(b) Subsection (d) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-5) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) A charge under subsection (a) shall be filed within ninety days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, except that in the case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has followed the procedure set out in subsection (b), such charge shall be filed by the person aggrieved within two hundred and ten days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency. Except as provided in subsections (a) through (d) of this section and in section 707 of this Act, a charge filed hereunder shall be the exclusive remedy of any person claiming to be aggrieved by an unlawful employment practice of an employer, employment agency, or labor organization."

(c) Subsection (e) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) If within thirty days after a charge is filed with the Commission or within thirty days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c), the Commission has been unable to obtain voluntary compliance with this Act, the Commission may bring a civil action against the respondent named in the charge: Provided, That if the Commission fails to obtain voluntary compliance and fails or refuses to institute a civil action against the respondent named in the charge within one hundred and eighty days from the date of the filing of the charge, a civil action may be brought after such failure or refusal within ninety days against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene in such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending the termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (b) or further efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance."

(d) Subsections (f) through (k) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) are redesig-

nated as subsections (g) through (l), respectively, and the following new subsection is added after section 706(e) thereof:

"(f) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending final disposition of such charge and the court having jurisdiction over such action shall have the authority to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper: Provided, That no temporary restraining order or other preliminary or temporary relief shall be issued absent a showing that substantial and irreparable injury to the aggrieved party will be unavoidable. It shall be the duty of a court having jurisdiction over proceedings under this section to assign cases for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause such cases to be in every way expedited."

(e) Subsection (h) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5), as redesignated by this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(h) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action may be appropriate, which may include reinstatement hiring of employees, with or without back pay (payab by the employer, employment agency, or labor organizatio as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employmen practice). Interim earnings or amounts earnable with rea sonable diligence by the person or persons discriminate against shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwis allowable. No order of the court shall require the admissio or reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union o the hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual a an employee, or the payment to him of any back pay, i such individual, pursuant to section 706(a) and withi the time required by section 706(d), neither filed a charg nor was named in a charge or amendment thereto, or was refused admission, suspended, or expelled or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin or in violation of section 704(a). No order made hereunder shall include back pay or other liability which has accrued more than two years before the filing of a complaint with said court under this title."

(f) Section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42

U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended by adding to the end thereof of the following new subsections:

"(m) In any case in which it is found that there has been discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex or national origin in the establishment or operation of an exclusive or preferential system for referral of applicants for employment (in addition to any other remedies provided in this Act), the United States Training and Employment Service shall establish and maintain a non-discriminatory system for the referral of such applicants. Any person required to use such exclusive or preferential system, whether by contract or practice, shall also utilize the system established and maintained by the United States Training and Employment Service and shall give preference in employment to applicants referred by the Service if such applicants are competent to perform the required work.

"(n) In any case in which it is found that there has been discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex or national origin in the establishment, admission into, or operation of an apprenticeship or training program in a trade or craft (in addition to any other remedies provided in this Act), the United States Training and Employment Service shall establish and maintain such additional or alternative apprenticeship and training programs in the locality involved as may be required to assure that no applicant for apprenticeship or training shall be discriminated against on account of race, color, religion, sex or national origin."

1ST SESSION

H. R. 9247

JUNE 17, 1971

Mr. ERLENBORN (for himself and Mr. MAZZOLI) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor

A BILL

To further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1971".

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (6) of subsection (g) of section 705 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–4 (f) (6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to refer matters to the Attorney General with recommendations for intervention in a civil action brought by an aggrieved party under section 706, or for the institution of a civil action by the Attorney General under section 707, and to recommend institution of appellate proceedings in accordance with subsection (h) of this section, when in the opinion of the Commission such proceedings would be in the public interest, and to advise, consult, and assist the Attorney General in such matters.

(b) Subsection (h) of such section 705 is amended to read as follows:

"(h) Attorneys appointed under this section may, at the direction of the Commission, appear for and represent the Commission in any case in court, provided that the Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court or in the courts of appeals of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by the Commission."

SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (a) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whenever it is charged in writing under oath by a person claiming to be aggrieved, or a written charge has been filed by a member of the Commission where he has reasonable cause to believe a violation of this title has occurred (and such charge sets forth the facts upon which it is based and the person or persons aggrieved) that an employer, employment agency or labor organization has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission, within five days thereafter, shall furnish such employer, employment agency, or labor organization (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') with a copy of such charge and shall make an investigation of such charge, provided that such charge shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission shall determine after such investigation, that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such endeavors may be made public by the Commission without the written consent of the parties, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding. Any officer or employee of the Commission, who shall make public in any manner whatever any information in violation of this subsection shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year.

(b) Subsection (d) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) A charge under subsection (a) shall be filed within one hundred and eighty days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, except that in the case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has followed the procedure set out in subsection (b), such charge shall be filed by the person aggrieved within two hundred and ten days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency. Except as provided in subsections (a) through (d) of this section and in section 707 of this Act, a charge filed hereunder shall be the exclusive remedy of any person claiming to be aggrieved by an unlawful employment practice of an employer, employment agency, or labor organization."

(c) Subsection (e) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) If within thirty days after a charge is filed with the Commission or within thirty days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c), the Commission has been unable to obtain voluntary compliance with this Act, the Commission may bring a civil action against the respondent named in the charge: Provided, That if the Commission fails to obtain voluntary compliance and fails or refuses to institute a civil action against the respondent named in the charge within one hundred and eighty days from the date of the filing of the charge, a civil action may be brought after such failure or refusal within ninety days against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene in such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending the termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (b) or further efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance."

and the following new selection is added after section 706 (e) thereof:

"(f) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending final disposition of such charge and the court having jurisdiction over such action shall have the authority to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper: Provided, That no temporary restraining order or other preliminary or temporary relief shall be issued absent a showing that substantial and irreparable injury to the aggrieved party will be unavoidable. It shall be the duty of a court having jurisdiction over proceeding under this section to assign cases for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause such cases to be in every way expedited."

(e) Subsection (h) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) as redesignated by this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(h) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice). Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable. No order of the court shall require the admission or reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union or the hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any back pay, if such individual, pursuant to section 706(a) and within the time required by section 706(d), neither filed a charge nor was named in a charge or amendment thereto, or was refused admission, suspended, or expelled or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin or in violation of section 704(a). No order made hereunder shall include back pay or other liability which has accrued more than two years before the filing of a complaint with said court under this title."

TRODUCTORY REMARKS OF SENATOR HARRISON A. WILLIAMS

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and other Sena-, I introduce a bill that would strengthen and broaden the enforce-nt powers of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act was enacted by Congress in 1964. s Act, signed into law just a little more than seven years ago, rec-ized the prevalence of discriminatory employment practices in the ited States and the need for Federal legislation to deal with the blem of such discrimination. The goal of assuring equal employ-nt opportunity for all of our citizens was made a national commit-nt by that Congressional Act. Unfortunately, however, the machin-we created for achieving this goal was not in all respects equal to commitment.

The deficiency in the 1964 Act was that the Equal Employment Op-tunity Commission, which was established to administer Title VII, not given the authority to issue judicially enforceable orders to back up its findings of discrimination based on race, color, relig sex, or national origin. Its authority in such cases has been limite conciliation efforts.

As a consequence, unless the Department of Justice concludes a pattern or practice of discrimination is involved, the burden of taining enforceable relief rests upon each individual victim of disc ination, who must go into court as a private party with the resul expense that entails, in order to secure the rights promised him u the law.

Thus, those persons whose economic disadvantage was a prime son for enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities provis find that their only recourse in the face of unyielding discrimina is one that is financially prohibitive.

A further consequence is that the Commission's lack of enforcem authority reduces its ability to achieve compliance and conciliat efforts. Obviously respondents are less willing to cooperate in arriv at a satisfactory resolution of a discrimination complaint when t know that the Commission's power is merely exhortive. The exp ence of the Commission has substantiated this conclusion for the fa that conciliation efforts have been unsuccessful in more than hal the cases in which it has found that discrimination has occurred.

The economic consequences to those whom the Act was designe help have been extreme. The statistics are vivid and I would lik recite just a few of the more significant results. Last month the tion's overall unemployment was six percent of the labor force.
unemployment rate for Negroes and other minorities was 9.8 perc
By comparison, the rate of white unemployment was 5.6 percent.
unemployment rate of nonwhite teenagers at this time last year 28.7 percent. This horrendous figure has increased to 31.3 percent c pared with 15.4 percent for white teenagers.

Moreover, the burden of unfair employment practices does not fall on our minority citizens. A major area of compliance ignored employers is the rights of female workers.

About 40 percent of all workers are women. Current figures indi that two-thirds of all working mothers are either widowed, divor or separated from their husbands, or had husbands whose incomes w below $7,000.

The discrimination against women in employment continues part larly with regard to earnings. The average American woman works full time earns only $60.50 for each $100 earned by the aver American man.

Unfortunately, it must also be noted that discrimination, prima in the executive suite, is still practiced on the basis of religion nationality.

The time has come to bring an end to job discrimination once for all and to insure to every American the decent self-respect t goes with a job commensurate with one's abilities.

The hopeful prospects that Title VII offered millions of Americ in 1964 must be made a reality in fact if we are to maintain a heal society and a Nation dedicated to justice.

Last year I introduced similar legislation as S. 2453. That bill, a ensive deliberation by the Senate, was passed providing the needed forcement machinery for equal employment opportunity for the st time. Unfortunately, the House of Representatives did not act on bill before adjournment.

Our bill provides the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission h the power to conduct administrative hearings if conciliation orts fail after a complaint and to issue cease and desist orders that uld eliminate discriminatory employment practices.

Similar procedures have long been available to other administrative encies, and there is clearly no valid reason for any longer depriving s Commission of similar machinery for performing its assigned re-nsibilities. To ensure due process, the Commission's orders will be ject to judicial review in the United States Courts of Appeal upon ition by any party to the proceedings.

n addition, the bill consolidates three areas of Federal civil rights ivities in the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Since enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 there has been increased vity by the Federal Government in eliminating employment dis-nination through its procurement power under Presidential Execu-Order. In addition, the Federal Government has moved to elimi-e employment discrimination within its own house through the sident's authority over the Civil Service Commission.

n its most recent report, the Civil Rights Commission commented the need for consolidation of Federal Government anti-discrimina-y efforts:

In October 1970, the Commission concluded that only by trans-ring OFCC's contract compliance responsibilities and Justice's gation responsibilities to EEOC could effective coordination of Fed-l equal employment efforts be achieved. In the light of continued ffective coordination, the Commission continues to believe that con-dation of equal employment opportunity functions is necessary."

'onsequently, the bill provides that the present authority of the orney General to bring cases involving a pattern or practice of stance to Title VII would be transferred to EEOC. Second, the vity under Executive Order 11246 relating to equal employment portunity by government contractors would be transferred from Secretary of Labor to the Commission. Third, the overall super-on for Equal Employment Opportunity for Federal employees uld be transferred from the Civil Service Commission to the Equal ployment Opportunity Commission.

'he bill also contains other significant provisions. The Commis-n's jurisdiction would be extended to include employers and unions h eight or more employees and members. State and local govern-nt employees, and teachers.

'inally, the bill makes a number of changes relating to the organi-on of the Commission recordkeeping requirements and the pro-ures involved in administrative enforcement.

believe that by enacting this bill we will be able to finally make Commission a truly effective instrument for preventing discrimina-n in employment and fulfilling the Congressional commitment to al employment opportunity made several years ago.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR EDWARD M. KENNEDY

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am cosponsoring the Equal E ployment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971 because I belie that its grant of cease and desist power to the EEOC is vital to t accomplishment of the national goal of equal access to jobs for Americans, and because we have waited too long to extend the p visions of the 1964 Equal Employment Act to state and local gove ment and to additional private employers.

I wish to express, however, my serious concern that the bill's tra fer of all equal employment functions from Department of Lab Department of Justice and the Civil Service Commission to the EE at this point in time may impose an unmanageable burden on th already overworked and underfunded agency. Moreover, this transf may place all of the equal employment eggs in one basket—a bask that might turn out to be a weak one if a majority of the Commissi members is not enthusiastic and courageous about implementing t mandate of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

But, I am confident that these concerns will receive full consider tion in the hearings and debate on the bill, and that the final versi of the legislation will reflect such changes or protections as may a pear necessary. I therefore am pleased to cosponsor the bill at th time as evidence of my desire for its speedy processing and its passa at the earliest possible time.

S. 2515

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

SEPTEMBER 14, 1971

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia (for Mr. WILLIAMS) (for himself, Mr. BAYH, Mr. BROOKE, Mr. CASE, Mr. CHURCH, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. GRAVEL, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. HART, Mr. HARTKE, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. MCGOVERN, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. METCALF, Mr. MONDALE, Mr. MONTOYA, Mr. MOSS, Mr. MUSKIE, Mr. NELSON, Mr. PELL, Mr. PERCY, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. RIBICOFF, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. SCHWEIKER, Mr. STEVENSON, and Mr. TUNNEY) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare

A BILL

To further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971".

SEC. 2. Section 701 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e) is amended as follows:

(1) In subsection (a) insert "governments, governmental agencies, political subdivisions," after the word "individuals".

(2) In subsection (b) strike out all before "Provided further", and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) The term 'employer' means a person engaged in an industry affecting commerce who has eight or more employees for each working day in each of twenty or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year, and any agent of such a person, but such term does not include (1) the United States, a corporation wholly owned by the Government of the United States, an Indian tribe, or any department or agency of the District of Columbia subject by statute to procedures of the competitive service (as defined in section 2102 of title 5 of the United States Code), (2) a bona fide private membership club (other than a labor organization) which is exempt from taxation under section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954: Provided, That during the first year after the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, persons having fewer than twenty-five employees (and their agents) shall not be considered employers."

(3) In subsection (c) beginning with the semicolon strike out through the word "assistance".

(4) In subsection (c) strike out between "(A)" and "and such labor organization", and insert in lieu thereof

"twenty-five or more during the first year after the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, or (B) eight or more thereafter,"

(5) At the end of subsection (h) insert before the period a comma and the following: "and further includes any governmental industry, business, or activity".

SEC. 3. Section 702 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–2) is amended to read as follows:

"EXEMPTION

"SEC. 702. This title shall not apply to an employer with respect to the employment of aliens outside any State, or to a religious corporation, association, educational institution, or society with respect to the employment of individuals of a particular religion to perform work connected with the carrying on by such corporation, association, educational institution, or society of its religious activities."

SEC. 4. (a) Subsections (a) through (e) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 259; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–5(a)–(e)) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Commission is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unlawful employment practice as set forth in section 703 or 704 of this title.

"(b) Whenever a charge is filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved, or by a member of the Commission upon the request of any person claiming to be aggrieved, alleging that an employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs, has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall serve a copy of the charge on such employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') as soon as practicable thereafter and shall make an investigation thereof. Charges shall be in writing and shall contain such information and be in such form as the Commission requires. Charges shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is not reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, it shall dismiss the charge and promptly notify the person claiming to be aggrieved and the respondent of its action. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such informal endeavors may be made public by the Commission, its officers or employees, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding without the written consent of the persons concerned. Any person who makes public information in violation of this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. The Commission shall make its determination on reasonable cause as promptly as possible and, so far as practicable, not later than one hundred and twenty days from the filing of the charge or, where applicable under subsection (c) or (d), from the date upon which the Commission is authorized to take action with respect to the charge.

"(c) In the case of a charge filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State, or political subdivision of a State, which has a State or local law prohibiting the unlawful employment practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, the Commission shall take no action with respect to the investigation of such charge before the expiration of sixty days after proceedings have been commenced under the State or local law, unless such proceedings have been earlier terminated: Provided, That such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effective date of such State or local law. If any requirement for the commencement of such proceedings is imposed by a State or local authority other than a requirement of the filing of a written and signed statement of the facts upon which the proceeding is based, the proceeding shall be deemed to have been commenced for the purposes of this subsection at the time such statement is sent by registered or certified mail to the appropriate State or local authority.

"(d) In the case of any charge filed by a member of the Commission alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State or political subdivision of a State which has a State or local law prohibiting the practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof the Commission shall, before taking any action with respect to such charge, notify the appropriate State or local officials and, upon request, afford them a reasonable time, but not less than sixty days: Provided, That such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effective day of such State or local law, unless a shorter period is requested, to act under such State or local law to remedy the practice alleged.

"(e) A charge under this section shall be filed within one hundred and eighty days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred and a copy shall be served upon the person against whom such charge is made as soon as practicable thereafter, except that in a case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has initially instituted proceedings with a State or local agency with authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, such charge shall be filed by or on behalf of the person aggrieved within three hundred days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency.

"(f) If the Commission determines after attempting to secure voluntary compliance under subsection (b) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved, which determination shall not be reviewable in any court, the Commission shall issue and cause to be served upon the respondent a complaint stating the facts upon which the allegation of the unlawful employment practice is based, together with a notice of hearing before the Commission, or a member or agent thereof, at a place therein fixed not less than five days after the serving of such complaint. Related proceedings may be consolidated for hearing. Any member of the Commission who filed a charge in any case shall not participate in a hearing on any complaint arising out of such charge, except as a witness.

"(g) A respondent shall have the right to file an answer to the complaint against him and with the leave of the Commission, which shall be granted whenever it is reasonable and fair to do so, may amend his answer at any time. Respondents and the person aggrieved shall be parties and may appear at any stage of the proceedings, with or without counsel. The Commission may grant such other person a right to intervene or to file briefs or make oral arguments an amicus curiae or for other purposes, as it considers appropriate. All testimony shall be taken under oath and shall be reduced to writing. Any such proceeding shall, so far as practicable, be conducted in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable in the district courts of the United States under the Rules of Civil Procedure for the district courts of the United States.

"(h) If the Commission finds that the respondent has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons aggrieved by such unlawful employment practice an order requiring the respondent to cease and desist from such unlawful employment practice and to take such affirmative action, including reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organizations, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice), as will effectuate the policies of this title: Provided, That interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the aggrieved person or persons shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. Such order may further require such respondent to make reports from time to time showing the extent to which he has complied with the order. If the Commission finds that the respondent has not engaged in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons alleged in the complaint to be aggrieved an order dismissing the complaint.

"(i) After a charge has been filed and until the record has been filed in court as hereinafter provided, the proceeding may at any time be ended by agreement between the Commission and the parties for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment practice and the Commission may at any time, upon reasonable notice, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it. An agreement approved by the Commission shall be enforceable under subsections (l) through (n) and the provisions of those subsections shall be applicable to the extent appropriate to a proceeding to enforce an agreement.

"(j) Findings of fact and orders made or issued under subsections (h) or (i) of this section shall be determined on the record. Section 554, 555, 556, and 557 of title 5 of the United States Code shall apply to such proceedings.

"(k) Any party aggrieved by a final order of the Commission granting or denying in whole or in part the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in any United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question is alleged to have occurred or in which such party resides or transacts business, or in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, by filing in such court within sixty days after the service of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission and to any other party to the proceeding before the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall file in the court the record in the proceeding as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of the petition the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to grant to the petitioner or any other party, including the Commission, such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such record a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, the order of the Commission and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed or modified. Any party to the proceeding before the Commission shall be permitted to intervene in the court of appeals. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order of the Commission. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its member, or agent shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon the filing of the record with it, the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States, as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

"(l) The Commission may petition any United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question occurred or in which the respondent resides or transacts business, for the enforcement of its order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, by filing in such court a written petition praying that its order be enforced and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order. The Commission shall file in court with its petition the record in the proceeding as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the parties to the proceeding before the Commission. Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein and shall have power to grant to the Commission, or any other party, such temporary relief, restraining order, or other order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such record a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside in whole or in part, the order of the Commission and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed or modified. Any party to the proceeding before the Commission shall be permitted to intervene in the court of appeals. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its members, or agent shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, w findings with respect to questions of fact, if supported by stantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, s be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon filing of the record with it the jurisdiction of the court s be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be fi except that the same shall be subject to review by Supreme Court of the United States as provided in sec 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed u this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

"(m) If no petition for review, as provided in subs tion (k), is filed within sixty days after service of the C mission's order, no petition for review has been filed as p vided in subsection (k), and the Commission has not sou enforcement of its order as provided in subsection (l), any person entitled to relief under the Commission's order may petition for a decree enforcing the order in the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question occurred, or in which a respondent named in the order resides or transacts business. The provisions of subsection (m) shall apply to such petitions for enforcement.

"(o) The Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by attorneys appointed by the Commission.

"(p) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve the power of the Commission to grant effective relief in the proceeding, the Commission shall, after it issues a complaint, bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending its final disposition of such charge, or until the filing of a petition under subsections (k), (l), (m), or (n) of this section, as the case may be, in the United States district court for any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful employment practice concerned is alleged to have been committed, or the judicial district in which the aggrieved person would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful employment practice, but, if the respondent is not found within any such judicial district, such an action may be brought in the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28, United States Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in all cases be considered a judicial district in which such an action might have been brought. Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such injunctive relief or temporary restraining order as it deems just and proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law. Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, except paragraph (a) (2) thereof, shall govern proceedings under this subsection.

"(q) (1) If a charge filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) is dismissed by the Commission, or if within one hundred and eighty days from the filing of such charge or the expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), whichever is later, the Commission has neither issued a complaint under subsection (f) nor entered into an agreement under subsection (f) or (i) which is acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved, the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and within sixty days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon the commencement of such civil action, the Commission shall be divested of jurisdiction over the proceeding and shall take no further action with respect thereto, except that, upon timely application, the court in its discretion may permit the Commission to intervene in such civil action if the Commisson certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (c) or (d) or the efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance.

"(2) The right of an aggrieved person to bring a civil action under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall terminate once the Commission has issued a complaint under subsection (f), or has entered into an agreement under subsection (f) or (i) which is acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved: Provided, That if after issuing a complaint the Commission has not issued an order under subsection (h) within a period of one hundred and eighty days of the issuance of the complaint, the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge at any time prior to the Commission's issuance of an order under subsection (h): Provided further, That if the person aggrieved files a civil action against the respondent during the period from one hundred and eighty days to one year after the issuance of the complaint such person shall notify the Commission of such action and the Commission may petition the court not to proceed with the suit. The court may dismiss or stay any such action upon a showing that the Commission has been acting with due diligence on the complaint, that the Commission anticipates the issuance of an order under subsection (h) within a reasonable period of time, that the case is exceptional, and that extension of the Commission's jurisdiction is warranted."

(b) Subsections (f) through (k) of section 706 of such Act and references thereto are redesignated as subsections (r) through (w), respectively.

(c) Section 706(r) of such Act, as redesignated by this section, is amended by adding at the end the following sentence: "Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper."

(d) Section 706(n) and (v) of such Act, as redesignated by this section, are amended (1) by striking out "(e)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(q)", and (2) by striking out "(i)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(u)".

SEC. 5. Section 707 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Effective on the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act, the functions of the Attorney General and the Acting Attorney General, as the case may be, under this section shall be transferred to the Commission, together with such personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available, or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred to the Commission hereby as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions pursuant to this subsection, and the Commission shall thereafter carry out such functions in the manner set forth in subsections (d) and (e) of this section.

"(d) In all suits commenced pursuant to this section prior to the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, proceedings shall continue without abatement, all court orders and decrees shall remain in effect, and the Commission shall be substituted as a party for the United States of America or t Attorney General or Acting Attorney General, as appr priate.

"(c) Subsequent to the date of enactment of the Equ
Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, t Commission shall have authority to investigate and act
a charge of a pattern or practice of discrimination, whethe filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieve or by a member of the Commission: Provided, That all suc actions shall be in accordance with the procedures set fort in section 706, including the provisions for enforcement an appellate review contained in subsections (k), (l), (m) and (n) thereof."

SEC. 6. (a) Subsections (b), (c), and (d) of sectio 709 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 263; 4 U.S.C. 2000e–8(b)–(d)) are amended to read as follows

"(b) The Commission may cooperate with State and local agencies charged with the administration of State fai employment practices laws and, with the consent of such agencies, may, for the purpose of carrying out its functions and duties under this title and within the limitation o funds appropriated specifically for such purpose, engage in and contribute to the cost of research and other projects o mutual interest undertaken by such agencies, and utiliz the services of such agencies and their employees, and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, may pay by advance or reimbursement such agencies and their employees for services rendered to assist the Commission in carrying out this title. In furtherance of such cooperative efforts, the Commission may enter into written agreements with such State or local agencies and such agreements may include provisions under which the Commission shall refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases specified in such agreements or under which the Commission shall relieve any person or class or persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed under this section. The Commission shall rescind any such agreement whenever it determines that the agreement no longer serves the interest of effective enforcement of this title.

"(c) Every employer, employment agency, and labor organization subject to this title shall (1) make and keep such records relevant to the determinations of whether unlawful employment practices have been or are being committed, (2) preserve such records for such periods, and (3) make such reports therefrom as the Commission shall prescribe by regulation or order, after public hearing, as reasonable, necessary, or appropriate for the enforcement of this title or the regulations or orders thereunder. The Commission shall, by regulation, require each employer, labor organization, and joint labor-management committee subject to this title which controls an apprenticeship or other training program to maintain such records as are reasonably necessary to carry out the purpose of this title, including, but not limited to, a list of applicants who wish to participate in such program, including the chronological order in which such applicants were received, and to furnish to the Commission upon request, a detailed description of the manner in which persons are selected to participate in the apprenticeship or other training program. Any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee which believes that the application to it of any regulation or order issued under this section would result in undue hardship may apply to the Commission for an exemption from the application of such regulation or order, and, if such application for an exemption is denied, bring a civil action in the United States district court for the district where such records are kept. If the Commission or the court, as the case may be, finds that the application of the regulation or order to the employer, employment agency, or labor organization in question would impose an undue hardship, the Commission or the court, as the case may be, may grant appropriate relief. If any person required to comply with the provisions of this subsection fails or refuses to do so, the United States district court for the district in which such person is found, resides, or transacts business, shall, upon application of the Commission, have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring him to comply.

"(d) In prescribing requirements pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, the Commission shall consult with other interested State and Federal agencies and shall endeavor to coordinate its requirements with those adopted by such agencies. The Commission shall furnish upon request and without cost to any State or local agency charged with the administration of a fair employment practice law information obtained pursuant to subsection (c) of this section from any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee subject to the jurisdiction of such agency. Such information shall be furnished on condition that it not be made public by the recipient agency prior to the institution of a proceeding under State or local law involving such information. If this condition is violated by a recipient agency, the Commission may decline to honor subsequent requests pursuant to this subsection."

(b) Section 709 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is amended by: (1) redesignating section 709(e) as 709(f) and (2) by adding immediately after section 709(d) as amended, the following subsection (e):

"(e) Any record or paper required by section 709(c) of this title to be preserved or maintained shall be made available for inspection, reproduction, and copying by the Commission or its representative, or to the Attorney Gene or his representative, upon demand in writing directed to t person having custody, possession, or control of such reco or paper. Unless otherwise ordered by a court of the Unit States, neither the members of the Commission nor its re resentative, or the Attorney General, nor his representati shall disclose any record or paper produced pursuant to th title, or any reproduction or copy, except to Congress or an committee thereof, or to a governmental agency, or in th presentation of any case or proceeding before any court grand jury. The United States district court for the distri in which a demand is made or in which a record or pape so demanded is located, shall have jurisdiction to compel h appropriate process the production of such record or paper.

ROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

(Mr. Dent asked and was given permission to address the House 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks, and to include extraous matter.)

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, the Equal Employment Opportunities Enrcement Act of 1971—H.R. 1746—will be brought up for considern tomorrow. It is my understanding that we will be engaged in neral debate on the bill at that time, and read it for amendment on ursday.

Mr. Speaker, although the bill was reported by the Committee on ucation and Labor some time ago by a rather substantial vote, I uld be less than realistic if I did not recognize the deep concern ny Members have with certain of its provisions. Unfortunately, the has been the object of considerable—and often unfair—criticism at least one large employer association. In spite of our explanations, fact remains that some provisions appear onerous to a majority ny colleagues.

n an effort to make the bill conform to the will of a majority, I pose to offer three significant amendments on Thursday. I will be ned by colleagues who previously found H.R. 1746 unacceptable. For the benefit of all Members, I now include the amendments and rief description in the record:

No. 1—AMENDMENT TO H.R. 1746

n page 8, line 3, after the word "allowable.", add the following new sentence: Provided further, That no order made hereunder shall include backpay or reinement liability which has accrued more than two years before the filing of a rge with the Commission. Such order may further require such respondent ake reports from time to time showing the extent to which he has complied the order. If the Commission finds that the respondent has not engaged in unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the preson or peralleged in the complaint to be aggrieved an order dismissing the complaint."
n page 26, line 3, after the word "practice).", insert the following new sene:
No order made hereunder shall include backpay or reinstatement liability ch has accrued more than two years before the filing of a charge with the mission."

No. 2—AMENDMENT TO H.R. 1746

n page 29, at the end of line 18, add the following new sentence:
The Commission shall be prohibited from imposing or requiring a quote or erential treatment with respect to numbers of employees, or percentage of loyees of any race, color, religion, sex, or national origin."

No. 3—AMENDMENT TO H.R. 1746

(SECTION 4)

On page 5, strike lines 21 through 25, and on page 6, strike lines 1 throu and substitute the following:

"(e) A charge shall be filed within one hundred eighty days after the a unlawful employment practice occurred except that in a case of an unlawfu ployment practice with respect to which the persons aggrieved has initiall stituted processings with a State or local agency with authority to grant or relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect th upon receiving notice thereof, such charge shall be filed by the person aggr within three hundred days after the alleged unlawful employment practice red, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agenc terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or agency. The Commission shall within ten days of the filing of the charge a copy of such charge upon the person against whom the charge is made.

My first amendment would impose a 2-year "statute of limitati on the awarding of backpay and reinstatement under title VII. T if the EEOC or, in the case of an individual action, the Court, fo that an unlawful employment practice existed, backpay liability c not be extends further than 2 years from the time the charge was with the Commission. I would also like to point out that the exis law requires a setoff from any award of the amount which the plainant did, or reasonably could have, earned.

My second amendment would forbid the EEOC from imposing quotas or preferential treatment of any employees in its administra of the Federal contract-compliance program. This responsibi which is now vested in the Office of Federal Contract Compliance the Department of Labor, would be transferred by H.R. 1746 to Commission. Such a prohibition against the imposition of quota preferential treatment already applies to actions brought under VII. My amendment would, for the first time, apply these restrict to the Federal contract-compliance program.

My final amendment would require that copies of charges brou before the Commission be served upon respondents within 10 days.
existing law only requires that notice be given "as soon as practical

QUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

Ir. Bolling. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules. all up House Resolution 542 and ask for its immediate consideration. The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

See p. 151 for copy of H. Res. 542.)

The Speaker. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 1 hour.

Ir. Bolling. Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any great controversy r this rule, more or less agreed upon as a way in which to give the sides of the issue a fair opportunity to present their point of view l then have a decisive vote. The rule does waive points of order inst the Ramseyer rule and against section 11 of the bill, which does comply with clause 4 of rule 21, in that it involves a transfer of ds.

The rule also makes in order consideration without the interven- of any point of order H.R. 9247 as an amendment in the nature of ubstitute. Points of order are obviously waived against that. That ans that the so-called Erlenborn amendment may be offered and e will be joined directly. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the ance of my time.

Ir. Martin. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Martin asked and was given permission to revise and extend remarks.)

Ir. Martin. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 542, as the gentleman m Missouri has explained, provides for 3 hours of debate, under an n rule, on H.R. 1746, a bill to provide additional powers to the Equal ployment Opportunity Commission. As the gentleman has ex- ined, there are three waivers of points of order, and the so-called enborn bill would be made in order as a substitute.

This legislation would amend Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 4, which set up the Equal Employment Opportunity Commis- n. That Commission considers complaints from employees based on or, race, creed, religion, sex, and national origin. Unfortunately, ever, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 did not give enforce- nt powers to the Commission, at least complete enforcement powers, as a result they have been somewhat handicapped in carrying out ir findings.

The committee bill as reported provides for substantial increases in erage of the act. For instance, all Federal, State, and local em- yees would be subject to the act itself. In addition, the present law ers only employers or companies who employ 25 or more employees. der the committee bill they would be reduced to eight or more em- yees. In addition, currently those engaged in teaching or in the edu- on profession, both in private and public schools, are exempt from law. Those would be brought in under coverage of the committee . It is estimated that a total of 22 million Americans would be ught under this act who are currently exempt.

n addition, the committee legislation would transfer from the De- tment of Justice power in "practice or pattern" discrimination suits. That would be transferred, under the committee bill, to EEOC. Additionally, the Office of Federal Contract Compli which is currently operating in the Department of Labor, woul transferred to the EEOC.

The argument has been made by the committee in the committe port that the Erlenborn bill, which would transfer the prosecutio these cases from the Equal Employment Opportunity Commissio the Federal courts, would delay proceedings. Yet, if we take a loo the committee report on page 64, in the testimony of Mr. Brown Chairman of the EEOC, we will find they have a tremendous bac of cases thus far. In the 5 years during which this bill has bee operation, the Commission has had over 52,000 cases presented t In the first 7 months of the fiscal year 1971, the total amounted cording to the Chairman, to 14,129, a considerable increase over vious years. With the addition, Mr. Speaker, of 22 million Ameri to come under the umbrella of this act, the increase in the workloa the Commission would be tremendous.

I would like to quote from the testimony of Chairman Brown of EEOC, when he appeared before the general Subcommittee on La

> Given the tremendous backlog of charges pending now with the Commissi 25,195 as of February 20, 1971—the additional work which would have to be un taken by the Commission if it gets enforcement powers, the difficulty of obtai adequate funding for the Commission, and finally, the tremendous admini tive difficulties embodied in such a transfer, I am doubtful as to the desirab of transferring OFCC at this time. Specifically, the administrative difficu are by far the greatest in my view: almost insurmountable.

The committee bill, Mr. Speaker, would set up this five-man EE board to be the investigator, the prosecutor, the judge, and the jur these cases. An employer would be considered guilty until he pr himself innocent—which is opposite the manner in which our co have operated ever since our founding almost 200 years ago. In courts a man is considered innocent until proven guilty.

This would give tremendous powers to the Equal Employment portunity Commission, comparable to those which the NLRB rently has.

In 1963, Senator GRIFFIN, of Michigan, then a member of the ucation and Labor Committee of the House, and the distinguished tleman from Georgia (Mr. Landrum) made a complete study and vestigation of the operation of the NLRB. I was interested in subject and worked with these gentlemen on the matter. I recall tha 1963, from the studies that Mr. Griffin and Mr. Landrum made, it discovered that the NLRB up to that point had reversed previous cisions by the board 171 times.

Why did that occur? A new administration came in 1961. New m bers were appointed to the NLRB whose philosophy was somew different from those who had served under the administration President Eisenhower. They were more inclined, let us say, tow the labor viewpoint than the management viewpoint. As a result of change in the personnel and background, and as a result of this fu mental philosophy of the new appointees of the NLRB, 171 decisi were overridden by the NLRB which had been made prior to t point.

Since then, I imagine, the number is a great deal larger than 17

That is the grave danger, Mr. Speaker, in the committee legislat we have before us today. The Equal Employment Opportunity C ssion will be given unlimited powers, and any eligible employee in United States may file a complaint with the Commission. They are ing to be overwhelmed with work down there. There are five mem- s of the Commission, each appointed for a 5-year term. If there is hange in the administration we are going to get new men appointed that Commission, and again we are going to have a repetition of at has occurred in the NLRB over the past several years.

This is a very, very dangerous piece of legislation. I shall not go into tail with regard to the Erlenborn substitute, but shall only say that power of being investigator, prosecutor, judge and jury of these es is given to the Commission by the committee bill, and some of ose powers would be taken away from them, and the matters would handled in the Federal courts, which is the proper place to handle es of this nature, rather than in a Commission.

The charge is made in the committee report that if this is handled the Federal courts great delay will ensue. Let me refer again to report itself. Chairman Brown of the Commission testified they currently running 18 to 25 months behind in the handling of these es and have over a 25,000 backlog.

Let us take a look at how the Federal courts are operating. We can e a look at pages 60 and 61 of the report.

The most complaints come from Texas, Louisiana, Florida, Ala- na, and so on.

The median time interval in months for nonjury trials in such States closes the information set forth there. There is given the number of nths of delay in the various courts in these 10 States.

In summary, of the 29 district courts represented in the above statis- s, 21 courts had a median time of 12 months or less and eight courts d median trial completion times of 6 months or less.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again pired.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

In other words, by handling this through the Federal courts rather n through the Commission these cases will be decided a great deal re expeditiously than is proposed under the committee bill.

There is one other point I should like to make, Mr. Speaker, in clos- . The Commission is composed of five men or women who are ap- nted by the President of the United States. Under the committee , as I have explained, these five appointees have great power in w of the fact that they are—and I repeat this point—investigator, osecutor, judge and jury. In view of the fact that these are appoint- nts made by the President, and the administration can change from ne to time from one party to another, we are not going to get con- ent decisions made by boards appointed under different Presidents. These men or women have such great power that it is a good illus- tion of a nation being governed by men rather than by laws, when have this sort of thing, a Commission with these extensive powers. do not believe we want a further extension of government by men, her than by law in the United States.

support the rule, Mr. Speaker. I hope that when the substitute of gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) is presented to the use, the Members will be on the floor and that it will be adopted by overwhelming vote.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the olution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 1746) to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of bill H.R. 1746, with Mr. Adams in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispen with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Kentucky (Perkins) will be recognized for 1½ hours and the gentleman fr Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) will be recognized for 1½ hours.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky (Perkins).

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

(Mr. Perkins asked and was given permission to revise and ext his remarks.)

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, 7 years ago Congress enacted the C Rights Act of 1964. Title VII of that act for the first time establis Federal machinery to deal with the problem of discriminatory empl ment practices.

Title VII provided informal methods of conciliation and persua as the primary mechanism for obtaining compliance. Only whe "pattern or practice" of resistance to the statutory mandate was fo did it make provision for enforcement by the Government and t only by the Attorney General.

Title VII established the Equal Employment Opportunity C mission as an independent agency charged with administration of policy of equal opportunity but provided no effective enforcem authority. Such enforcement as an individual might require ha be secured by a private suit in the district courts. At the time it widely felt that litigation would be necessary only on an occasi basis to meet determined resistance.

The experience of the past 6 years, however, has shown this vie be incorrect. Title VII is not a total failure but neither is it the gl ing success that was expected.

Discrimination in employment continues to pervade the Un States.

Only 6.9 percent of professional and technical workers; 3.6 per of managerial employees; 6.8 percent of craftsmen and foremen; 3.7 percent of sales personnel are minority persons. During 1970, unemployment rate among blacks was almost twice that among wh While these figures are improvements over those of a decade ag is nonetheless clear that minorities are not very rapidly reaching t rightful place in society—this despite 7 years experience under a which outlawed discrimination of any kind.

The situation of the working woman is just as disappointing. C 30 million women are employed in the United States, comprising imately 38 percent of the Nation's work force. Ten years ago, en earned 60.8 percent of the average salaries earned by men. In however, women's earnings only represented 58.2 percent of the ies made by men. In that same year, 60 percent of women, but only rcent of men earned less than $5,000 while, at the other end of the only 3 percent of women, but 28 percent of men had earnings of 00 or more.

fective remedies for these situations have not, and it is now clear, ot result from the present statutory scheme. During its first 5 the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission received more 52,000 charges, of these 35,145 were recommended for investiga- Each year the number of charges brought before the Commission ncreased. In fiscal year 1969 the Commission received 12,148 ges; in fiscal year 1970, 14,129 charges; and in fiscal year 1971, 0 charges. The figures for the current fiscal year are expected to an even sharper rise.

the 35,145 charges that were recommended for investigation, the nission found reasonable cause to find that a discriminatory prac- xisted in 63 percent of them. In less than half of these cases, how- was the Commission able to achieve a totally or even partially ssful conciliation.

ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

correct these deficiencies, H.R. 1746 provides for significant revi- in the primary enforcement mechanisms of Title VII. The Equal loyment Opportunity Commission would continue to seek volun- esolution of disputes, but if conciliation efforts were unsuccessful, ommission would be authorized to issue complaints, hold hear- nd, where unlawful employment practices are found, issue ap- iate cease and desist orders. These orders would, of course, be ct to review by the courts.

e bill also makes provision for individual recourse to the Federal ct courts if the Commission dismisses a charge, or if it has not a complaint or entered into a conciliation attempt within a ied period of time.

members of the Committee on Education and Labor recognized ed for some method of adjudication of charges of unfair employ- practices, as indeed, did all witnesses who testified at the com- e hearings. The only disagreement has been whether this enforce- power should be through administrative proceedings or through tion in the courts.

alternative of providing court enforcement for Title VII, in- of administrative cease-and-desist proceedings, was given full areful consideration throughout the hearings and in discussions h the subcommittee and full committee levels.

e type of enforcement chosen by the committee is the very same of authority which has been given to virtually all other Federal atory agencies including the Federal Trade Commission, the In- te Commerce Commission, the Securities and Exchange Com- on, and the National Labor Relations Board. In addition, the and-desist method of enforcement is the same as that adopted by the 38 States which have equal employment opportunity laws.

e same considerations which led to the adoption of administrative cement in other areas are equally applicable here. Perhaps the most important of these is the need for the development and app tion of expertise in the recognition and solution of employmen crimination problems—particularly as these problems are present their more complex, institutional forms.

The development of case law in the area of employment disc nation in recent years has made it increasingly clear that the difficult problem encountered is not whether discrimination ha curred but what the appropriate remedy is to be. The questio remedies is further complicated when discriminatory practice found to be inherent in basic methods of recruitment, hiring, p ment, or promotion.

The very nature of the issues arising under Title VII indicates reliance upon the expertise developed by trial examiners and Com sioners is just as important for this subject matter as it is in the eq complex fields of securities regulation and deceptive trade practic

Enforcement through an administrative proceeding will insu speedy adjudication of issues and will result in a more uniform predictable body of law.

Agency litigation is less subject to technical rules governing ma such as pleadings and motions—matters which can and very ofte provide opportunity for delaying tactics. Administration tribunal less constrained by formal rules of evidence which give rise to a le ier—and, therefore, a more costly—process of proof.

The experience of other agencies indicates that an additional be of cease-and-desist authority is that the mere availability of an ad istrative sanction encourages settlements, usually even before the examiner stage is reached. The NLRB, for instance, disposes o proximately 95 percent of its cases at the administrative level. I mation on State Fair Employment Practice Commissions indi similar tendencies toward settlement. For example, the Pennsylv Human Relations Commission issued 47 cease-and-desist orde equal employment cases through 1969. During that same period, ever, 3,838 complaints were successfully disposed of without nee an order.

PRIVATE SUITS

H.R. 1746 retains the right of an individual to bring a civil suit u the act. Section 715 provides that if the Commission finds no reaso cause, fails to make a finding of reasonable cause, takes no actio respect to a charge, or has not issued a complaint nor ent into an acceptable conciliation or settlement agreement within 180 after a charge is filed, it shall notify the person aggrieved. That son then has the right to bring, within 60 days, an action in the pr U.S. District Court. Such a provision is a necessary protection fo rights of the individual.

To prevent duplication of proceedings under Title VII, H.R. makes provision for the termination of Commission jurisdiction o private action has been filed. The Commission would, however, r a right to intervene in private actions. Once the Commission iss complaint or enters into a conciliation or settlement agreement w is acceptable to all parties, the right of private action would be minated.

PATTERN OR PRACTICE CASES

ction 707 of the Civil Rights Act would be amended to transfer 'pattern or practice" suit authority which is now vested in the At- ey General to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. transfer of "pattern or practice" jurisdiction to the Commission d eliminate overlapping jurisdictions and unnecessary duplica- of function. This is especially important in view of the Commis- s acquisition of cease-and-desist authority, an authority broad gh to cover most of the same violations as formerly reached ugh "pattern or practice" suits. Persons charged with unfair em- nent practices should not have to account to several Federal agen- each of which pursue separate policies. Such duplication is not burdensome but also harassing.

OFFICE OF CONTRACT COMPLIANCE

r this same reason, H.R. 1746 would also transfer to the Commis- all authority, functions, and responsibilities of the Secretary of r pursuant to Executive Order 11246 relating to requirements of iscrimination and affirmative action for Federal contractors. Cur- y, the Secretary of Labor through the Office of Federal Contract pliance—OFCC—monitors, coordinates, and evaluates the Gov- ent-wide contract compliance program and supervises the com- ce enforcement activities of the 15 Federal contracting agencies. ty, uniformity, and predictability, in policy and practice will un- tedly result when a single agency, rather than a multitude of . is responsible for enforcing the national policy of equal em- nent opportunity.

ore important, the compliance program will be greatly strength- if alternative remedies are made available. The only remedy cur- y available to the OFCC is contract debarment, a penalty so dras- at it has never been used.

esently, there are more than 10 million persons employed by State ocal governmental units, an increase of over 2 million in less than ade and, by all indications, these numbers will increase signifi- y in the decade ahead. Very few of these employees, however, remedies sufficient to eliminate and deal with discriminatory oyment practices. its 1969 report on equal employment opportunity in State and governments, the U.S. Civil Rights Commission found that mi- ies are frequently denied equal access to jobs through both institu- l and overt discriminatory practices. In this respect, there was difference between State and local governments as employers and rivate sector. Perpetuation of past discriminatory practices gh de facto segregated job ladders, invalid selection techniques, tereotyped supervisory opinions as to the capabilities of minorities as a class were found to be widespread, and, if anything, even pervasive than in the private sector.

PREFERENCE FOR STATE ACTION

Under H.R. 1746, every effort is made to give State fair em ment practice agencies, where they exist, the first opportunity t The history of State FEPC activity since 1964 suggests that the up of Federal power in the event of a failure of local action to r a discrimination complaint would substantially strengthen the tiveness of the State and local agencies. Thus, the increased cov contemplated by this bill should provide more than ample opport and incentive for States to resolve their own problems of discri tion, before it becomes necessary to pass them on to the Fe Government.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS EXEMPTION

The present Section 702 of Title VII exempts employees of e tional institutions from the protection of the act. H.R. 1746 re this exemption—Section 3 of the bill. Discrimination against m ities and women is as pervasive in the field of education as discri tion in any other area of employment. In light of our national of equal employment, there is no reason to perpetuate this exem

TESTS

H.R. 1746 includes a provision requiring that all ability tests are to be relied on be directly related to bona fide occupational fications. Tests, while often useful and necessary, frequently op unreasonably to the disadvantage of minority groups. Such tes often irrelevant to the job to be performed by the individual tested and uncritical reliance on tests are not only of little help in agement personnel decisions, but also screen out the disadvan minority applicant.

The Supreme Court recognized this problem in its recent de in Griggs v. Duke Power Company (91 S. Ct. 849, 1971). The held in that case that employment tests, even if valid on their fac applied in a nondiscriminatory manner, were invalid if they t to discriminate against minorities and the company could not an overriding reason why such tests were necessary. esently, responsibility for implementing the national policy of employment rests in the Civil Service Commission pursuant to utive Orders 11246 and 11478. Despite some progress in this the record is far from satisfactory. Statistical evidence shows minorities and women continue to be excluded from large numof Government jobs. They continue to be excluded from higher policymaking, supervisory positions.

e transfer of the civil rights enforcement function from the Civil ce Commission to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commisloes not preclude the Civil Service Commission from continuing vn equal employment programs. Rather, it is expected that the Service Commission and the Federal agencies will continue their itment to affirmative measures such as recruiting and training, alized hiring programs, the training of compliance personnel supervisory personnel in equal employment, and the appoint-of EEO officers. In all cases the primary responsibility will rest Civil Service Commission and the other Federal agencies. It is ted that the EEOC will work closely with them in the develop-and maintenance of their various programs. It will, however, rm a useful function in reviewing these new programs.

THE COMPROMISE AMENDMENTS

R. 1794 was reported by the Committee on Education and Labor bstantial majority. It is a bill imminently fair in its treatment of roblem. The bill has in the meantime, however, been subject to sive and often unfair criticisms. Some opponents of the measure charged that it lacks "due process" procedures as will be evident debate. H.R. 1746 contains more meaningful elements of due ss than does the substitute which is being urged on the House, 9247. The committee recognizes, however, that concern exists minds of some Members because of the questions raised. To re-that concern and to remove any doubts that may remain, the ittee will undertake some amendments to the measure. Briefly l, they are:

st. There will be an amendment to impose a 2-year "statute of tions" on the liability of the employer for back pay or reinnent.

ond. The second amendment will prohibit the EEOC from img quotas or requiring preferential treatment. There is no such sion in the substitute proposal.

rd. The third amendment will require notification within 10 to the employer, union or employer agency whenever an unlawnployment practice charge is filed with the Commission.

urth. The fourth amendment will insure that the informal pro-e under the Office of Contract Compliance authority are confi-ties ~ntial. Giving publicity to such action will be prohibited an r ishable.

These amendments substantially improve the committee bill. W

I urge all my colleagues to support the committee bill as m by these amendments and to defeat the Erlenborn substitute.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the man from Minnesota (Mr. Quie).

(Mr. Quie asked and was given permission to revise and his remarks.)

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Chairman, as ranking minority member of the mittee on Education and Labor I was an active participant in h to develop what I regard as the most effective approach to outl racial and other forms of arbitrary discrimination in the v aspects of the employment relationship. This approach is ful flected in the substitute bill now before the House, H.R. 9247, duced on a bipartisan basis by two members of our committee, I sentatives Erlenborn and Mazzoli.

During the deliberations of the committee there was neve question that the EEOC—Equal Employment Opportunity Co sion—created by the Civil Rights Act of 1964 sadly needed ef authority to enforce the law, an authority which it does not pre possess. Virtually all of our committee members were agreed on t

The committee bill resorts to what has become popularly kno power to hold hearings and to issue cease-and-desist orders enfor though this issue of the "judicial" versus the cease-and-desist od of enforcement is the major issue which separates their respec›roponents in the committee, it is not the only point of difference aspects of the substitute which make it superior to the committee e Civil Rights Act of 1964, Title VII of which deals with discrimin affecting employment, and which both bills are designed to d, does not apply to public employees at any governmental level, ıer local, State, or Federal, and is similarly inapplicable to emctively.

far as public employees are concerned, a majority of the States ıave their own laws prohibiting discrimination in State and local e employment, and the U.S. Civil Service Commission similarly :rying out its own program to eliminate such discrimination in Federal service. If all of these public employees together with the ›yees of the small employers having less than 25 workers are ght under the law, it is estimated that well over 20 million addil employees will be added to the huge number over which the C already exercises jurisdiction. It is impossible even to project ›ximately the increase in the Commission's present enormous og of cases which would result, a backlog which could mean a

:ease-and-desist procedure. The same defects would obviously exist as those I have already described in my comparison betw judicial and the cease-and-desist approach. But these defect be compounded not only by the loss of the accumulated expe

The committee bill transfers the functions of the OFCC—
Federal Contract Compliance—from the Department of Labo EEOC. The OFCC acts under the authority of a Presidential tive order for the purpose of eliminating discriminatory empl practices on the part of Federal Government contractors. Th tions for violation of the Executive Order are refusal to a Federal Government contract to an offending employer or canc of such a contract if it has already been awarded.

The OFCC does not operate under the provisions of the Civil Act and its procedures and sanctions are completely differen those of that act, and cannot administratively and pragmatic brought within its present statutory scheme. Nevertheless, th mittee bill does not expressly supersede the Executive Order n it incorporate its provisions into the act.

This raises a serious question as to whether the EEOC can its own procedures to the administration of the OFCC functio sede the Executive Order and to incorporate its provisions as an ment to the Civil Rights Act. These difficulties would arise fr fact that OFCC has imposed requirements on Federal Gover

But it should be noted that the proponents of the committ operate effectively with the cease-and-desist procedure, they theless support the provision bringing State employees under th eral jurisdiction of the EEOC. In my opinion they thereby d strate a lack of faith in the effectiveness of these State laws to inate job discrimination in their own jurisdictions.

In conclusion, let me reiterate that those of us on our com who support the substitute bill are just as dedicated to the erad of the evils of employment discrimination as are the propone the committee bill, and are convinced that our solution will pro more satisfactory in every significant respect.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman California (Mr. Hawkins).

(Mr. Hawkins asked and was given permission to revise and his remarks.)

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago a member Rules Committee, in referring to this matter, indicated this rather dangerous proposal being sponsored by the gentleman
New York (Mr. Reid) and me and several other coauthors.

May I simply remind Members that 32 States have simila which prevail at the present time. If the gentleman is referring States which have adopted this dangerous law as their own uld like to point out the following States are included among those ich have such a law: Alaska, Arizona, California, Colorado, Conticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kenky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, w Mexico, New York, Oklahoma, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, ode Island, Utah, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and oming.

So just consider that those States, too, have moved into this rather ngerous area to impose the cease-and-desist administrative prore on the American people.

There are other misstatements which I believe should be corrected he very beginning, in terms of us who seek to implement the Civil ghts Act of 1964. We should remember that the national policy is of equal employment opportunity, and that the rights which we k to secure under H.R. 1746 are well founded in our law and in our erican traditions.

While discrimination because of race, color, religion, national origin ex is a thing which is specifically prohibited by Title II of the Civil ghts Act of 1964, this law protects every individual in this country. ite no less than black workers may, in some instances, be discrimied against. That is, there may be so-called reverse discrimination in ny instances.

Discrimination in employment violates our conception of justice and ality as expressed in the Declaration of Independence, our Conution, and the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The only room for disagreement in the matter before us is the means mplementing the national policy. H.R. 1746 seeks to incorporate a l-established and effective procedure by granting cease-and-desist hority to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Nurous other Federal regulatory agencies already have this author—the NLRB, Federal Trade Commission, Securities and Exchange nmission, just to name a few of the numerous agencies that aldy have the power which we seek to give to this Commission under R. 1746

This procedure was recommended by the Congress in the Administive Procedure Act which we adopted in 1946, and under which st administrative agencies have operated for some 25 years.

Also, in 32 of our States, as I have already enumerated, the fair ployment laws they have adopted follow this same procedure.

As a matter of fact, the only effort being made by anybody or any ividual is on this one particular question. The substitute seeks to n the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission into a legal nstrosity by denying it the same enforcement authority enjoyed by ilar agencies and by requiring it to go into the already overcrowded rts to seek enforcement.

Can anyone imagine what 10,000, 15,000, or 20,000 additional cases ld mean in the already overcrowded courts of our land?

Those who advocate this approach may say that they differ only to the means of enforcing the policy of this Nation. Their position, vever, is weakened by the support they receive from those who ier deny the existence of discrimination or seek no legislation at all. Outside of court enforcement itself, which is of doubtful value, no er provision of the substitute would add strengthening protection those against whom discrimination is rampant.

There are those who would make H.R. 1746 appear as a sch allow blacks to leapfrog over others at the expense of white w
Not only does this ignore the entire issue of sex discrimination, involves more white than black women, but it overlooks entir experiences already recorded in the 32 States with cease-and enforcement power where past dire predictions have been prov tirely false.

Again some say that this bill seeks to establish quotas and st crimination in reverse. Not only does Title VII prohibit this, establishes beyond any doubt a prohibition against any indi white as well as black being discriminated against in employm only seeks to insure that persons will be treated on their indi merits and in accordance with their qualifications. To assert th hiring of a black employee without discrimination implies the tion of a qualified white employee is pure sophistry, as the court said. I cite the United States Court of Appeals, the Third Circ Pennsylvania, before which the appeal from the case in Pennsyl involving the so-called Philadelphia Plan was taken. Such a c sion also ignores the viable and fluid character of the labor forc it assumes an entirely static economy.

Perhaps the wildest charge of all is the constant charge that 1746 somehow denies a fair trial or due process of law. This a

Ir. Hawkins. I thank the gentleman. I would simply respond by ing that in the other body an identical bill has been introduced with support of both the Republican and Democratic leadership and I ld hope that that same kind of cooperation and bipartisan support ld be followed in this House.

Ir. Hawkins. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. Conyers asked and was given permission to revise and extend remarks.)

Ir. Conyers. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Ir. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from California the work that he has done to bring this present bill to the floor of House, and also to remember that it was in the 91st Congress that lso performed yeoman service, along with the leadership of the tleman from New York (Mr. Reid). I am reminded that in the Congress there was a great deal of confusion over the processes of House that would have brought this bill to the floor. I am sure the tleman in the well recalls it very well. We were trying to find per- who would help us to get the bill through the committees in this y. We were unsuccessful. However, I remember being assured and ssured that in the 92d Congress we would do what had ought to e been done many years before.

Ir. Hawkins. I thank the gentleman.

While discrimination because of race, color, religion, national origin, ex is the thing specifically prohibited, the existing law (Title VII of Civil Rights Act of 1964) protects every individual in this country. ites, no less than black workers, may in some instances be discrimi- ed against as is alleged in "reverse discrimination" on men as well women. The prohibited acts may not be committed against "any vidual" as the law specifies throughout Title VII.

Discrimination in employment violates our concepts of justice and ality as expressed in the Declaration of Independence, our Con- ution, and the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The only legal room for greement is the means of implementing the national policy.

.R. 1746 seeks to incorporate a well-established and effective pro- ure by granting "cease-and-desist" authority to the Equal Employ- nt Opportunity Commission. Numerous other Federal regulatory ncies have this authority—the NLRB, FTC, SEC, to name a few. s procedure was recommended by Congress in the Administrative cedure Act (1946) under which most administrative agencies have operated for 25 years. Also in 32 of our States similar fair en ment bodies have adopted this approach.

The substitute seeks to turn the Equal Employment Opport Commission into a legal monstrosity by denying it the same en ment authority other similar agencies enjoy and requiring it into already overcrowded courts to seek enforcement.

Those who advocate this approach say they differ only in the of enforcing the law. Their position, however, is weakened by th port they receive from those who either deny the existence o crimination or who seek no legislation at all. Outside of court en ment itself, which value may be doubtful, no other provision of th stitute would add strengthening protection for those against discrimination is rampant.

There are those who would make H.R. 1746 appear as a sche

Not only does this ignore the entire issue of sex discrimination involves more white than black women, it overlooks entirely th periences already recorded in 32 States with cease-and-desist enf ment power where such dire results have been proved entirely

Again, some say H.R. 1746 seeks to establish quotas, special t ment, and discrimination in reverse. Not only does Title VII hibit this—it establishes, beyond any doubt—a prohibition against individual, white as well as black, being discriminated against in ployment. It seeks only to insure that persons will be treated on individual merit and in accordance with their qualifications. To a that the hiring of a black employee without discrimination implic

Such a conclusion ignores the viable and fluid character of the

The bedrock upon which this legislation is founded is education conciliation not punitive action. The Administrative Procedure approach is being used to avoid cumbersome and costly court ac

If direct court action were more desirable the existing law

VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

A major purpose of H.R. 1746 is a consolidation of the var agencies dealing with job discrimination. Three agencies in partic the EEOC, the Employment Section of the Attorney Generals' o and the Office of Federal Contract Compliance have jurisdiction, with its own goals, policies, guidelines and programs.

By centralizing these in a single agency we achieve coordinat clarity, and consistency in defining discrimination and in shapi proper remedy. And we free litigants from a multiplicity of suits, ion over the intent and requirements of the law, and duplication of pection and recordkeeping.

ome fear has been expressed that the transfer of the Office of leral Contract Compliance from the Labor Department to the OC would weaken this agency.
he Labor Department's enforcement of Federal contract compliance been a dismal failure. Its sanction, contract termination or debar-t of contractors, has never been used. As a matter of fact, about f of all charges filed with the EEOC involve Federal contractors o are ignoring the Executive Order which created the contract pliance procedure.
recent report of the EEOC on employment of Spanish-speak-persons in the Southwest revealed that fewer were employed by ernment contractors being monitored by OFCC than companies iout contracts.
The main concentration of the OFCC has been on the construction ustry, notably the "Philadelphia plan." This emphasis has ignored nen almost altogether as well as the welfare of male workers not olved in the building trades. As a matter of fact, among the major criminators against women are educational institutions of higher ning, which although exempted under Title VII, are covered by the cutive Order No. 11375 and, therefore, as Federal contractors hable by the OFCC.
f the OFCC were to be judged on its track record, it would cer-ly not rate among the favorites. No discrimination is worse than of those who do business with the Federal Government supported ax dollars. We ask merely that "those who dip their hands into the lic till should not object if a little democracy sticks to their fingers." ocial justice is never a one-way love affair. In asking minorities and nen to be patient a little while longer in the realization of their c constitutional and human rights, we seek to establish a forum for r just grievances which is at least capable of shaping an effective edy.
The alternative is a proposal which seeks to clamp the lid on a boil-pot of frustration and discontent. Minorities and women seek per-nance, not rhetoric and delay. The economically disadvantaged justice and fair play, not redtape and more sophistry. The time to is now as Father Theodore Hesburgh summed up his views in the l Civil Rights Commission report:

> ersonally, I don't care if the United States gets the first man on the moon, hile this is happening on a crash basis, we dawdle along here on our corner ie earth, nursing our prejudices, flouting our magnificent Constitution, ignor- the central moral problem of our time, and appearing hypocrites to all the d.

nd in still another report of the Commission are these words:

> ie tragedy is that there still are millions of minority group citizens who be- e Congress meant what it said when it enacted an Equal Employment Oppor- ty law.

think now is the time that this Congress can restore the faith of se millions of individuals and revitalize the faith of the people of world in the democratic process of our American way of life, and ope that we will not dally around again, as Father Hesburgh has l, but will meet this issue squarely and head-on.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in his remarks mentioned that identical to H.R. 1746 was introduced in the Senate, I believe tha yesterday; is that correct?
Mr. HAWKINS. I think it was several days ago but, yes. I did reference to a bill that was introduced in the other body.
Mr. ERLENBORN. Is that identical to the bill before the House, 1746?
Mr. HAWKINS. Almost identical. There are a few minor change basically it is the same bill. It is a cease-and-desist administrativ cedure bill, and it has the same coverages, and also goes to the type of consolidation.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Californi

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes t

Is the gentleman aware of the statement that was put in the Re of the House yesterday by the chairman of the subcommittee, the tleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent), relative to three amendm to H.R. 1746? And if the gentleman is aware of those amendm does the gentleman support them?
Mr. HAWKINS. The amendments were discussed with me, I am well aware of them, and I support all three. I have indicated that I

I do not think that all of the amendments personally would b

Mr. ERLENBORN. Could the gentleman tell me, are those amendm included in the version of the bill considered in the Senate?
Mr. HAWKINS. I am not aware of whether they are or not.
Mr. ERLENBORN. Will the gentleman in the well yield further?
Mr. HAWKINS. I do yield further to the gentleman from Illinois.
Mr. ERLENBORN. I would state to the gentleman that two of amendments that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent) p the Record yesterday are somewhat similar to amendments offere the minority, and were rejected in the committee, and one of them an amendment that would deny the OFCC jurisdiction, the rig

if that is not an absolute slap at the Philadelphia plan, in that would be isolating from the OFCC, if they should get jurisdic the authority to exercise as a governmental agency the problem has been exercised in the Philadelphia plan which was supporte the floor of this House when it was challenged recently?
Mr. HAWKINS. I want to say to the gentleman that I supported Philadelphia plan, the same as I think he did also. In my opinion amendment does not in any way contravene the intent of the Ph delphia plan.
Mr. ERLENBORN. How can the gentleman say that?

Mr. HAWKINS. May I explain?
Mr. ERLENBORN. I certainly would be glad to hear the gentleman's ou just said that the law prohibits the establishment of quotas. You referring to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964?

r. HAWKINS. Yes.
r. ERLENBORN. You are not referring to the Executive order of the sident from which the authority for the OFCC was derived?
r. HAWKINS. I have read the Attorney General's opinion and I ase you did also. As you no doubt saw, the Attorney General says
. in his opinion, the provisions of the Philadelphia plan do not conene the law of the prohibitions in Title VII.
o as I read the amendment, the amendment does not prohibit hing that the law does not already prohibit. It was never the intent, ie present Attorney General states in his opinion, that an Executive r should contravene what the law prohibits. So squaring this, it is to me when we talk about prohibiting quotas and talk of preftial treatment, we are merely reflecting what is in the present law.
ile this amendment clarifies things, it does not do anything that is already prohibited.
r. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?
r. HAWKINS. I yield further.
r. ERLENBORN. Let me recall to the attention of the gentleman as as to the membership of the House that, in fact, only a circuit t of appeal of our judiciary has upheld the Philadelphia plan.
n my opinion, the proposed amendment that is going to be offered by gentleman from Pennsylvania is nothing but a blatant attempt to ercut the authority of the OFCC for the Philadelphia plan. As was ted out by the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. Chisholm) ur hearings when she called for the support of the AFL–CIO for

rs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for n California a question.

itle VII of the Civil Rights Act has always prohibited the estab-nent of quotas. During the legislative history of the Civil Rights Act, it was clearly the congressional intent not to bring abou rights for some by denying civil rights to others. We had seen th decades. We were trying to end it. The legislative history of the Rights Act—the debate in the Senate and the House shows that not the congressional intent to establish quotas of any kind i struggles to bring about equality of opportunity.

The Executive Order 11246 under which the Philadelphia pla put into effect, in my judgment clearly did establish quotas. But not want to talk about the Philadelphia plan this afternoon. I to talk about situations of which I have personal knowledge.

I talked to the chairman of the committee and to others and that it would be impossible for me to support the committee bil we are considering today without some amendments—and this of them—a congressional prohibition against establishing any system—a prohibition against preferential treatment for some expense of others, a prohibition against "reverse discriminatio you will.

Let me tell you of three instances, and I think these can be multi by the thousands across the country.

In my own city of Portland, we have a ship conversion plant.

In the Portland area we have, perhaps, 5 or 6 percent black po tion. This ship conversion plant has records to prove they hav ployed 15 percent minority people. As a matter of fact they ca on an active recruitment program—seeking out members of mi groups.

The Contract Compliance Office in San Francisco came into land, and they said that they would not be eligible for any Fe contracts unless they would have 15 percent minority employe every single job category.

It was not sufficient to have 15 percent minority employees i plant itself. They required 15 percent of the electricians to be minority race: 15 percent of the welders must be of the mi groups; 15 percent of the secretarial help and so on right down th every single category.

There was absolutely nothing that this ship conversion plant do to satisfy the Office of Contract Compliance in San Francisco they followed their orders. This also required the "dumping" of contracts of negotiations which had been made; seniority rights ignored. All this was never the intent of the Civil Rights Act, a was never the intent of the Congress, so far as I am concerned. Th the reason the amendment will be offered by the distinguished man of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, this a noon: To give this House the right to decide whether or not we to amend the Civil Rights Act and to say whether we are goi establish quotas by law. H.R. 1746, the committee bill, on pag freezes Executive Order 11246 into the law. If this were passed wi amendment, we would be giving our approval to the quota system

In many instances this creates reverse discrimination, which I just as inexcusable and just as despicable as any kind of discrimina I want all people to have equal rights, equal opportunities in e tion, in housing, in jobs. This does not mean special preference for at the expense of others.

Let me give you two other instances. A year ago last Decem group of Oregon parents who are stationed in Washington, D.C epartment of military came into my office to talk about the situa-in the schools which their children attend. They had many com-its—in fact, 10 pages of incidents that had happened—but one ne things which seems to me relevant to our debate today was tatement by one of the parents: "I have a son in the fourth grade.

September—" and this was in December that they came to see "Since September my son has had seven substitute teachers: he r has had a regular teacher." aid, "Well, how can that be?" e said, "Under the Skelly Wright decision we had to have a quota ack and white teachers and as a regular teacher we cannot hire a e teacher. We must hire as a regular teacher a black teacher." No fied black teacher is available for this position. They are already ing in other schools, and a qualified white teacher cannot be hired regular teacher in this position. In my judgment, this is reverse imination, and it is doing great damage. It is counterproductive.
reates tension; it increases prejudices that might not otherwise ce.
third instance: A teacher here in the District schools—whom I very well and who is in the top five of the qualified social science ers here in the District as a result of examinations and recomlations—asked for a transfer to another high school because they noved out close to another high school. She applied, and the prinof the school who received her application said that they could ire her.
e said, "Be very candid with me. Is my race against me?"
id the principal said, "Yes, to be very candid, this is true. A quota been set up and we must observe that quota in this high school.
annot hire a white teacher." ave given you these three instances. They are not the Philadelphia
, but they are instances where preferential treatment has been
, where reverse discrimination has been practiced, where injustice occurred, and that is why the amendment will be offered this noon: To prevent preferential treatment, to prevent reverse dis-ination, to prevent quotas being established as far as either race ncerned.
lo not think that that is the way to run the country. We ought to t people on the basis of their qualifications, on the basis of their ation, whether they are white or black, red, brown or yellow, or ever their sex is, and not establish preferential quotas that are g great harm to our country, that are tearing the people apart, are not accomplishing our objectives. This is the reason I cannot ort the committee bill this afternoon in its present form.
ere are four amendments which I think are going to add subially to the quality—to the effectiveness of this legislation—and gentleman from Pennsylvania will offer those amendments. They put into the Record last night.
r. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
r. HAWKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.
r. CONYERS. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I am sorry we going to have to apparently, in the course of discussion of this bill, ise the issue so thoroughly that many people are going to end up ng the tail before the horse. We are here today to try to pass a bill will give the Commission cease-and-desist powers, which have advocated for a great number of years, legislation which has indeed passed this body once before, which has passed the Senat am hoping that the spirit of a very basic principle such as that get beclouded in some confusing rhetoric about whether you ar against the quota system.

A number of people have been trying to gain some freedom a tice within or without this system or in any other possible way, not going to try to divide this Congress into two groups, the raised in an extraneous fashion, in my opinion, his continue sideration during the debate, because I think too many of our m are going to be arguing on an amendment that has not been intr rather than on the substantive question before us.

Mr. HAWKINS. I thank the gentleman.

May I just try to clarify the issue as to what the present law says that it shall be an unlawful employment practice for an e ment agency or an employer to fail to or to refuse to refer for e ment or otherwise to discriminate against any individual becaus race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. That same prohib carried to employment agencies or unions or employers. It refers individual. I read that to mean any individual, any person who h he has suffered reverse discrimination has the same protection the law as the person who believes he has been discriminated a because he happens to be black.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. If the gentleman will yield one last time,

Mr. HAWKINS. It may be a condition for her support, but I she wants added security, which I personally do not believe is sary. I am not objecting to or supporting the amendment on the that I think the amendment corrects an ineffective law. I disagre the Philadelphia plan imposes a quota. In this respect I agree the Attorney General. If some people think it does, then I th

. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am extremely grateful to entleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) for his courtesy in yield-ie this time.
. Chairman, there is a spirit abroad that is troubling our land.
ically, it is not a revival of the kind of American spirit for which President recently called in his eloquent message to a joint session e Congress. Rather, it is a spirit compounded of fear and mistrust h once again threatens to pit race against race. Old passions that id thought were stilled have been reignited. The paper this morn-carried accounts of incidents from California to Boston which llustrative of this deepening and widening fissure in our society.
n Francisco, a city noted for its liberality of spirit, one-third of tudent population boycotts the public schools because of a busing Travel to the Middle West from which I come, and we discover in Pontiac, Mich., a great industrial plant, a stranger to the dis-raging in that city between parents and school board, is shut , and its machines stand silent because of picketing parents. In on, that ancient cradle of liberty, dissatisfaction over school bus-nas led one house of the Massachusetts Legislature to enact a te which would repeal provisions of the law that would prevent low of funds to all black schools. I mention these facts not to t an extraneous issue into the debate that begins today. I mention for two reasons. In the first instance they are indicative of the hat the mood and desire for strong civil rights legislation seems ve changed. The men who patiently and wearily walk the corriof Congress find fewer supporters, and even those who listen do mewhat abstractedly. The distinguished Chairman of the U.S.
Rights Commission, Father Theodore M. Hesburgh, himself a scholar, can speak for a unanimous Commission in recommend-grant of cease-and-desist authority to the Equal Employment ortunity Commission. But his voice is all but lost in the rising crelo of protest against clothing Government agencies with more nistrative power. I say all of this not out of bitterness but out of mn realization that there is a vastly different climate today than was back in 1968 when the Congress enacted open housing legis-n. nention these specific incidents that are troubling the peace and pility of our land because although they relate to our educational m and the highly emotional and difficult issue of school busing, ieve that there is a clear connection between legislation which d attempt to wipe out the pervasive effects of discrimination in oyment and the patterns to de facto segregation which have led e present impasse. One does not have to be a sociologist to apprethat the economic stratification in American society which has uced these patterns of segregated housing can be traced directly fact that, although blacks constitute 10 percent of the American force, eight out of 10 male black workers are concentrated in occupations that are grouped along the three lowest rungs of th nomic ladder in terms of income. Over the longer term, if we want to find a solution to this tormenting problem of how b desegregate the schools of our land in order to assure a quality tion to all of our children, it will only come as we succeed in ach a dispersal of the population that is today locked within the inn ghetto into our all white suburban areas. We will make a giant toward achieving that goal when the day comes that a man or w is no longer disqualified for employment or advancement in his pation or profession on the basis of his racial or ethnic backgro repeat, when we liquidate the problem of discrimination in em ment we do far more than assure a man of his right to a job. W give him along with that right the opportunity to cross some of th riers that are now raised against his complete entry into the e ment of all the privileges of being an American citizen. I find it than a little ironic that on the cover of Time magazine this wee peared the face of a famous behavioral psychologist, B. F. Ski who has written a very controversial book soon to be publishe titled "Beyond Freedom and Dignity." It is apparently Mr. ner's thesis that freedom and dignity, while they may have been a priate to an earlier era in the history of man, are no longer the important considerations for a society confronted by a race for vival. I find it ironic because no one on either side of this debate c truth and in conscience deny that there are still millions of Amer who have not achieved freedom and dignity. Therefore, I would gest that, despite any discouragement of the moment over some c conditions that are rending our country, that we in the Congres solve that we will continue that march toward freedom and di for all Americans by seeking to provide within a legislative fr work of due process those necessary guarantees against unequal t ment under the law.

The debate during these next 2 days will be conducted not on a very high forensic plane, but in an intelligent and enlightened ner because of the character and capacity of the chief protagonis this debate. Men of good will and also sometimes men of con purpose can disagree on the means whereby an objective can be reached. Therefore, I shall not at any time during this debate im the motivations of those who take a position contrary to my own.
suggest that the judicial process is superior to the administrative p ess in guaranteeing an effective implementation of the rights prov under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The argument against a grant of cease-and-desist authority s to break down under two main headings. First, it is alleged tha judicial process would be a more effective and expeditious way of pensing relief than would be the administrative process. And, frankly, there are statistics which can be adduced on both sides of argument. After a careful examination, however, I am convinced the administrative process would provide a more speedy remedy. T are some very egregious examples of civil rights cases where by v of dilatory pleadings and other delays that are countenanced by legal system years have gone by between the filing of a case and granting of a remedy to the aggrieved party. Certainly justice del is justice denied, in cases involving equal employment opportu just as much as it is in other civil and criminal cases.

fully realize that particularly in the business community there s to be a very deep seated fear of the administrative process. Some nessmen are quick to react to the suggestion that EEOC be given -and-desist authority by citing a parade of horribles that have red under other Federal agencies such as the NLRB. I think at point they should be reminded that the NLRB is not the only cy of such administrative authority. Indeed, the first administra- hearings in this country were held by customs officers, and go all vay back to 1789. Before the turn of the century the ICC was ed with the authority to conduct administrative hearings. The . FCC, and FTC are examples of other agencies that have dem- ated an ability to handle a grant of this kind of power. Certainly agree that Congress has a responsibility to carry out its oversight ority of the EEOC. If they abuse any powers they have been by statute they should suffer correction and reproof and be dis- ed in the appropriations process as well as by other means that vailable. However, I do not think that we should shrink from a of this authority unless we are willing to condemn the entire nistrative process which as I suggested has a very long history d.

ond, it has been suggested that under the administrative process will be a subtle shift in the burden of proof, and in other ways offending party will be unable to secure a due process. In a long which I previously addressed to all of my colleagues along with olleague from New York (Mr. Robison), and my colleague from sylvania (Mr. Biester), I sought to point out that, under the inistrative Procedures Act of 1946, Congress had made it clear administrative proceedings were to be initiated and conducted all of the essentials of due process that are guaranteed any person r our legal system.

conclusion, it is because I believe that we must move and act ively in the area of discrimination in employment practices that I using those means and taking those steps which will provide the expeditious and effective remedy.

as reading just a few minutes ago, as I sat here on the floor of the e of Representatives, a letter or memorandum prepared on the of the last Judicial Conference—the proceedings of the Judicial erence of the United States. It pointed out that due to the rising load in the Federal courts the conference is casting about desper- for ways to expedite trials, because in 1970 the conference re- d that the increase in that year in case filings was the steepest, steepest caseload for any year in the last decade. There was a of 127,270 civil and criminal cases in 1970.

nd the Judicial Conference stated—nations have not managed to keep pace with the filings . . . The slower in terminated cases inescapably forced the volume of pending cases up.

Mr. Chairman, that is the situation that confronts the F judiciary today.

I looked further at the report of the Judicial Conference with ence to the issue of the time required for trial and for the disp of these cases. The trial median for both civil and criminal cas 12 months. That does not sound too bad. But when one looks the list of specific districts, one comes to the eastern district of sylvania where the trial median time is 36 months, the southern d of New York is 28 months, the western district of Pennsylva 28 months, the very districts of the country where a number o cases are apt to be filed and the very districts in the country toda are literally drowning in a sea of cases.

Mr. Chairman, I was interested enough in this matter to tal the chief judge of the northern district of Illinois which is loca my district and he told me that because Congress has been so generous with grants of new jurisdiction that they simply cou handle the volume of cases which they are undertaking to handle and which are pending.

Mr. Chairman, it is because of the very deep-seated fear I hav if we are going to simply overburden the Federal judiciary wit gressional grants of authority in these cases, we will thereby t what proponents of this change say they want and that is efficie expeditious enforcement of the guarantees as contained under VII of the bill.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I have today decided that I will su the committee bill.

Mr. THOMPSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I made the point of that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Sixty-five Members are present, not a quorum. The Clerk wi the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed t swer to their names:

Committee resumed its sitting.
Chairman. The Chair wishes to announce that at the time of iorum call the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) had minutes remaining.

Chair at this time recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. born).
Erlenborn. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentle-rom Illinois (Mr. Railsback).
r. Railsback asked and was given permission to revise and extend narks.)
Railsback. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee. I like to just ask a couple of questions either of the gentleman California (Mr. Hawkins) or the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. born). Really, the reason for the questions is I think that every r who has had any opportunity to practice law has had occasion bly to try some cases before either the State or Federal agencies.
l you the truth, my concern is about the procedure that has tradily been followed in the case of administrative agencies particu-

at I would like to ask—and I can see the gentleman from Illinois Erlenborn) is on his feet—is this: Under the committee bill orrect that when a complaint is filed by an aggrieved individual, he Commission itself saw fit to file a complaint, they would have t to do so? Then the person who is alleged to have violated the ould be the respondent. What I am interested in is this: Am I t to the effect that he would appear before a hearing examiner?
ot made very clear in the bill when it talks about "agents." Erlenborn. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Railsback. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from is.
Erlenborn. Under the present procedure the party who feels ved may make a complaint to the EEOC. That complaint is nvestigated to find out if there is due cause for the issuance of a l complaint.
a matter of fact, it has been the case in the past where it takes iere from a year to a year and a half before this initial investigas completed, and a formal charge is filed. The same procedure be continued under the committee bill. Under the committee en, if a formal complaint is issued, if reasonable cause has been
, then it would be assigned to a hearing officer for the introduc-f evidence and a finding of fact.
Railsback. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois this ques-
Who would introduce the evidence on behalf of the Commission?
l it be somebody from the Commission, or would it be the hearing ner, or how would that work?
Erlenborn. It is my understanding that under the committee torneys would be appointed by the Commission to represent the who is making the charge. This attorney would offer the evidence alf of the plaintiff, which would then be passed upon or, rather, missibility of the evidence would be passed upon by the hearing

I might point out, however, although it has been alleged that t islation is following the procedure of the NLRB, that it is not th as that in the NLRB where there is an independent general c who represents the complaining party before the Commission.

Mr. RAILSBACK. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois if

Mr. ERLENBORN. If the gentleman would yield further so answer that?

Mr. RAILSBACK. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ERLENBORN. The hearing officer will act as the judge. I him, acting as the prosecutor, will be an attorney who represen Commission. Both the hearing officer and the attorney represe Commission, and they will act in behalf of and in the name of the mission. When the hearing officer concludes the hearing he ma final draft and prepares a proposed order.

Mr. RAILSBACK. Then his findings go to the Commission, a Commission can either approve or disapprove of the hearin aminer's findings?

Mr. ERLENBORN. That is correct. And in the case where there complaint about an aggrieved party this would be pro forma Commission would review the order, review the hearing officer's ings of fact, and issue their order. If there were a complaint aggrieved party there would be a more formal procedure for the missioners to review.

But I would point out that if this follows the pattern of the N the hearing officer's findings would be sustained in 90 percent cases.

Mr. RAILSBACK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yie me the additional time.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAILSBACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring up this Since the gentleman is on the area of the committee bill, the signi statements which appear in the precise, or the description of the mittee bill, H.R. 1746. These statements indicate that, in the instit of the action, the requirement that an aggrieved person's charg made under oath, has been deleted. Presently under the existing la aggrieved person has to make his charges under oath. This has deleted by H.R. 1746.

In addition, the gentleman mentioned about the Commission wh initiates action. In this case the Commissioner's charges do not ha be based upon a reasonable cause to believe that a violation occurred, so that the action against an alleged defendant, a party has allegedly discriminated, can be made first by a complainan under oath, and then by the Commission without reasonable gro to believe that a violation has occurred.

r. Railsback. Let me ask the gentleman this question. Once the mission makes a determination, am I correct that if there should be ppeal, and I believe it is to the Court of Appeals, would that al be based upon only the record of the hearing examiner as reed by the Commission? In other words, it is not a new trial, it is ly based on the particular record? Am I correct?
r. Mazzoli. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, this is my rstanding. Upon review, this is a simple review of what was ed below, which in many cases are charges not made under oath.
r. Railsback. Am I also correct that the Court of Appeals must ld the Commission if there was not the regular degree of proof nly substantial proof in support of the allegation.
r. Mazzoli. Yes; this is my understanding. It is based on the evi-e from the record as a whole and not on any area of the evidence, ust what appears in the record.
ie Chairman. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.
r. Erlenborn. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Illinois litional minutes.
r. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
r. Railsback. I yield to the gentleman.
r. Erlenborn. Let me just expand on this a bit. I think the answer ave received is correct. I would point out, however, that the rules idence, the rules of civil procedure that apply in the courts, the ral district courts, as my bill would require any case to be tried , those general rules of evidence do not necessarily apply in the nistrative hearing. If an appeal is taken, it must go to the circuit of appeals. There is no new evidence adduced. It is the hearing d and as it is said in the committee bill, the finding of the Commis-and the order must be sustained if it is supported by substantial nce. That does not even mean the greater weight of evidence—any antial evidence in the record would then be incumbent upon the it court of appeals to sustain the Commission's finding.
r. Railsback. I just want to say, I think I have supported almost civil rights measure. Frankly, my objections to the committee ave nothing whatsoever to do and are not even related to the parur department that we are trying to arm with this right. As a er of fact, I think I would vote to completely restructure our endministrative agency system. It bothers me—I have had a chance y cases before the Social Security Administration. When you a case in there and are trying to claim certain disability benefits, are introduced to the hearing examiner. In that case, he intro-s the evidence of the Social Security Administration and he rules our objections or he overrules your objections. He rules on the nce and he makes the findings and, in my opinion, they act as e and jury and prosecutor and then the record you have and take n that case to the Federal district court is simply the record he has had an opportunity to make rulings on and the adminisve agency.
seems to me, for that reason alone if for no other reason, even gh I want to see the EEOC given enforcement powers, that the Er-rn-Mazzoli substitute is far preferable to the committee version. ie Chairman. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has ex-
d.
r. Perkins. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 minute.
r. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Railsback. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. Perkins. First, let me state that the substantial evidence that is required here in the review court, that is the circuit cou appeals, under the committee bill, means substantial evidence that the court is substituting its judgment for the Commissio rather whether considering the record as a whole there is substa evidence to support its finding. If the court is of the opinion th not substantial evidence, the circuit court of appeals as a matt right sets aside the findings of the Commission.

That is what the word "substantial" means.

Mr. Railsback. The rule does not require a preponderance o dence.

The Chairman. The time of the gentleman from Illinois ha pired.

Mr. Perkins. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

The Chairman. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized minute.

Mr. Perkins. As I interpret the word "substantial" as used i statute, it means, considering the entire record as a whole, the mission's findings must be supported by substantial evidence. A is going to set aside findings unless there is substantial evidenc support the findings of the Equal Employment Opportunity mission—substantial and not anything less.

So I think the rights of the parties are adequately protected w we require that the evidence be substantial.

The Chairman. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has pired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenbo

Mr. Erlenborn. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentle from Illinois (Mr. Railsback).

The Chairman. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Railsback recognized.

Mr. Erlenborn. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Railsback. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. Erlenborn. Just briefly, because I would like to set to rest question and to correct the statement of the gentleman from tucky, who has said that it requires a greater weight of the evide I think the gentleman from Kentucky is a good enough lawyer to k that when you say "substantial evidence," it is not the greater we of the evidence. It is a lesser degree. We know from NLRB c decisions that it is not the greater weight of the evidence.

Mr. Railsback. Not only does it deal with substantial evidence, it is evidence that was derived from a proceeding that involve hearing examiner appointed by the Commission who ruled on objections, who ruled on the admissibility of evidence, and who m the findings of fact which for the most part are never overturned the reviewing tribunal. To my way of thinking there is nothing about that kind of procedure, and I just point out to the chairma this particular case those of us who favor civil rights may pr something like this, but in a case when you are representing a so security beneficiary who is claiming for total disability, which is v similar, it is a rather frustrating thing. The same thing is true with Bureau of Internal Revenue when you deal with them.

All I am saying is that it seems to me you are much better off a fair and impartial tribunal.

r. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
r. RAILSBACK. I am glad to yield to the chairman.
r. PERKINS. The findings of the Commission under the committee can be entirely separate. They are not bound by any findings of earing examiner that may be designated by the Equal Oppory Commission. It is a de novo proceeding.
r. RAILSBACK. Does the gentleman really deny that the Commission grees with those findings in not more than 2 or 3 percent of the s?
r. PERKINS. When the findings are appealed to the circuit court of eals we then see that the word "substantial" becomes significant.
'substantial evidence," we mean evidence of substantial nature and he scintilla rule as some have attempted to argue.
r. RAILSBACK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add my support to Erlenborn substitute bill—H.R. 9274—which in effect would emer the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to take its rimination cases to the Federal courts. This bill would give em-ees the opportunity to be examined through the trial process of courts where opposing arguments may be heard objectively and sions reached according to the governing law.
ie Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has been created r the Civil Rights Act of 1964, to help those people who have been ed employment, promotion, union membership, or other job, rel opportunity, through discrimination based upon race, color, ion, sex, and national origin. The law, however, limits the EEOC vestigation, mediation, and conciliation powers only. And up to point, the enforcement powers for the EEOC have not been de-
l. We seek to correct this deficiency today.
ia bill proposed by the gentleman from Illlinois provides for the )C to take its discrimination cases onto Federal courts whereas ommittee bill, H.R. 1746, would allow the EEOC to issue ceasedesist orders. By combining cease-and-desist powers with author-o issue back pay and affirmative action orders, the EEOC under 1746 would be transformed into a quasi-judicial body. I have us reservations whether the administrative hearing approach is )etter means for resolving employment discrimination cases.
the first place, the combination of advocacy and prosecution in the same small organizational structure makes attaining a m of impartial adjudication quite difficult, particularly in view ie strong advocate role EEOC has played in the past.
addition, quasi-judicial bodies typically must resolve competing ests and it is my opinion that employment discrimination is not ch a nature as to be termed an "interest" under our system.
perience has shown that legal arguments are not always effec-y brought forth under our present system of administrative ings. Furthermore, the procedural rules governing administrative ings are virtually nonexistent.
though there may be some dispute as to how efficiently the ad-strative hearing process versus the court enforcement process be, my experience would certainly be that the court approach is ir the most expeditious and effective means for handling EEOC cases.
stly, although appellate review would be allowed, the court enter-ng the review would be limited to the hearing record and would be required to affirm the Commission's ruling upon a finding c evidence supporting its decision.

For these reasons, I am convinced judicial enforcement will vide the best means to carry out the purposes of equal employ opportunities.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gent from Wisconsin (Mr. Steiger).

(Mr. Steiger of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make cl

Both bills grant enforcement power. Both bills can be consider operation of the agency.

There are two issues that were raised between the substitute with the committee bill, but there has been, as a result of the inse in the RECORD yesterday by the distinguished chairman of the sub mittee and the colloquy that has taken place today, a third issue has been raised in the committee consideration of these two bills, a is that third issue on which I shall touch first.

I admit to being absolutely appalled at the amendment whic distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania intends to offer, whi aimed at subverting the Philadelphia plan and the Office of Fe Contract Compliance's effort to carry forward an affirmative a program.

I do not understand on what basis, except perhaps the basis set on pages 304 and 305 of the hearing record by the gentlewoman New York (Mrs. Chisholm) on the whole question of why i committee bill the OFCC is proposed to be transferred intact t EEOC. Let me quote what the gentlewoman from New York ( Chisholm) said during her appearance before the committee, a will use her own eloquent statement:

> However, if labor really is serious and sincere about its support of > having the OFCC powers, I ask them if they would support codifying the

The simple way to reject that amendment to be offered by the ge settle the question once and for all. I urge all the Members of House to support the substitute.

Let me just touch briefly before I yield, on why it is advisable to the EEOC enforcement power to the court. I think the answer to given by the Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity mmission, Mr. Brown himself, in his statement before both the se and the Senate. He said:

the area of relief I believe that the district court approach is clearly and nstrably preferable to the cease-and-desist method. The pertinent yardstick e amount of time an aggrieved person must wait before he is afforded relief, do not think anyone needs more than that simple statement by Chairman of the Commission as to why the Erlenborn method is rior in handling the problem.

think we ought to make clear in any understanding of this whole that any effort to try to say there is going to be any backlog ase in the courts as a result of its passage is wrong. What we are ng about is what kind of power do we grant that will enable the mission to do a better job in voluntary compliance. I would argue listrict court approach rather than the cease-and-desist approach d bring about effective voluntary compliance with the orders of Commission.

here is one other point I want to make and that is to suggest that e attention may be paid to the question of what kind of enforce-power we give, there are three other matters in the committee bill deserve consideration. The one I have touched on is the transfer forcement power by OFCC to EEOC which I think is a mistake.
ll not take the time of the Committee to detail the reasons which e to the genesis of the two agencies, their differing guidelines and rent purposes. Second is the transfer from the Civil Service Comon the authority to handle discriminatory practices within the ral Government which would be brought in under the committee o EEOC and which, I think, would effectively disrupt any ral means of effectively dealing with employer-employee relation-within the Civil Service Commission. And lastly, there is the e question of transferring the pattern and practice suits from the ce Department to EEOC. I think the record of the Justice Dement in handling the pattern and practice suits is evidence of their ration, determination and of their ability to handle the authority was granted in the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

find no substantive reason to transfer that jurisdiction. I have d no reason in the hearings or in anything said on this floor as to there ought to be a transfer of that authority. Therefore, I believe uld be a mistake to do it.

or these reasons I support the substitute offered by the gentleman Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) and the gentleman from Kentucky Mazzoli). I urge the House to adopt it on the basis that it is the effective and fair method of giving the EEOC enforcement

The amendment which is proposed to be offered by the gentl from Pennsylvania would, in my judgment, strip away the abili the OFCC to carry out the mandate of Executive Order 11246.

As the gentlewoman from New York said in her testimony b the committee, there is apparently an effort underway by the A CIO, which wants to take the OFCC out of the business of the P delphia plan, and turn that power over to the EEOC. Now we se end product, which is to strip away from the OFCC any abilit follow through on that plan.

Mr. CONYERS. What about the sellout analogy if this House doe ratify its support of the procedures embodied in the Hawkins which was passed in the 90th Congress? Is that a sellout of rights?

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Of course, it is not a sellout of rights. Both bills grant enforcement power to EEOC. It is a total ing of the mark if one is going to argue that the Erlenborn subst is a sellout of civil rights, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. I am happy to yield to the gentle from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman says that the CIO or the AFL or other organization or person is asking that the authority of the of Contract Compliance be taken out, and all its appurtenant po they did not ask me to do that. Did they ask the gentleman?

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Did they ask me? Since I did not spo the bill offered by the gentleman from California, of course, they not ask me. But the AFL–CIO did appear before the subcommittee indicated its approval of the transfer section of H.R. 1746.

Mr. DENT. They did not ask me. I am sure I have some opposi in some of the trade and craft unions to the position I take.

Does the gentleman say that the Office of Contract Compliance power even above that which we are accused of trying to give t EEOC? It seems to me that the gentleman is saying that the Com sion will become judge, court, and jury if we give it cease-and-d power.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. I did not say that.

Mr. DENT. But the power inherent in the hands of the Office of tract Compliance under the Executive order makes it judge, j court, and jailer, because without any kind of review, and with a lutely no opportunity for an appearance, it can come in on a mi dollar contract, or a $250 million contract, or any Government tract, and say to the contractor, "Either you do this, you take so m of this particular group in this category, or your contract is null void."

What kind of power is that? Where under the Constitution is right?

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. May I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as chairman of the subcommittee, the argument would have somewhat more substance were the gentleman to have attempted to codify the powers of EEOC in the statute. He has not done it. What he is doing is attempting to transfer the authority from the Executive Order into EEOC.

Mr. DENT. They are codified. They are enforceable and workable.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is going to enforce them on the basis of the Executive order. Do not argue about that power, for we have not attempted to do anything with it.

Mr. DENT. Can the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Which one?

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman believe that the Executive order in the hands of the Office of Contract Compliance is a power which should be given to any agency of Government?

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. I believe their power is appropriate, constitutional, and legal.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Mazzoli).

(Mr. Mazzoli asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity of speaking to the House today, and I would like to express my appreciation to the chairman, Mr. Dent, for his yielding some of his very valuable time.

I would like to spend the few minutes that I have to put a few things in perspective, perhaps.

As has been mentioned earlier today and it will be mentioned for the remainder of the day that those who are for the Erlenborn-Mazzoli substitute are against civil rights and those who are for the committee bill are for civil rights. I certainly do not think that is a fair characterization of the work we did in committee, and I suggest that Mr. Erlenborn and I have produced a very adequate and I believe a very realistic substitute.

I hope that the members of this committee in judging the issues and the amendments will consider this not to be a civil rights matter but, rather, consider it to be a philosophical matter of whether cease-and-desist powers granted by the committee bill are superior to the court enforcement authority granted under the Erlenborn-Mazzoli substitute.

The course of the debate today touched on a lot of issues. I would like to mention a couple that I believe are very important to an adequate understanding of the bill.

First of all, it has not been brought out—and this is very important—that the substitute does not change the present EEOC operations with respect to courage of State and local government employees. Under the substitute, State, local, and municipal government employees would not be covered by the EEOC. I feel—and it is so said in our report—that there is an interposition under the committee bill which I think is disastrous, that is, the interposition of the Federal Government in State and local matters. You tell the State and local governments what they can do and what they cannot do. I do not think that is correct.

I urge the committee to study carefully that provision in the c mittee bill which would, if adopted, affect all of the State and government employees.

I would like to mention, also, that we were here earlier this after and heard——

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MAZZOLI. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENT. You say that we should not inject ourselves into S and local matters. Then, would you also say that we should rem from the jurisdiction of the EEOC all those companies that do do interstate business, because intrastate business has just as m right to be exclusively under State and local government as any ot So you would make it completely read that it affects only those are in interstate business.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, there can be an argument made on t but it seems to me that we talk about the unwarranted interposition, unnecessary interposition. I believe that is what this bill does. Unw rantedly it interposes the Federal Government into State and l matters.

I would like to mention something that we talked about ear today.

The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson) made a very eloq speech in behalf of the committee bill and he said that we could afford to adopt this substitute because it would overburden the Fed court system. I am wondering if perhaps in trying to avoid o burdening the Federal court system, we will overburden alleged fendants. On page 11 of the committee report, which I would ask Members to read, it is stated:

> Administrative tribunals are better suited to rapid resolution of such com

Which means, Mr. Chairman, that there is a huge bludgeon huge mace waiting on the sidelines to hit you over the head and, th fore, quick settlements are made as a result of the coercion.

Mr. Chairman, I would certainly feel that there must be enforcem powers granted to the EEOC, but it does seem to me that a m more orderly, much more structured, more rational and reali

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky expired.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

(Mr. Erlenborn asked and was given permission to revise and ex his remarks.)

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman we have before us the commi bill, H.R. 1746, and as provided for in the rule under which this de is proceeding, H.R. 9247, the Erlenborn-Mazzoli substitute and wh will be offered as a substitute for the committee bill.

Chairman, both of these bills have the same purpose; and, that give to the EEOC an opportunity to exercise some power of en-nent in the field of civil rights under Title VII of the 1964 Civil s Act.
1964 Civil Rights Act was the product of compromise, as is legislation of any controversy on the floor of this House and/or s Congress. A part of the compromise in passing that bill was creation of the EEOC, but no power to enforce was granted to ommission. When the bill was passed it was a year subsequent to ssage of the bill before the Commission went into business. It has ctive since 1965. In the intervening 6 years over 50,000 cases have iled before the Commission.
ink it is important to note that more than half of these over cases are still pending and unresolved.
re may be several allegations made as to why this deplorable on exists. One is that the Commission cannot resolve these cases all it is empowered to do is to bring the parties together in the s of conciliation, because they do not have the power of en-nent. I think this is a part of the reason. Frankly, that is why I with the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Mazzoli) in drafting that would give them enforcement authority.
re are other reasons. However, if you look at what the Commisas done in the intervening 6 years there are other causes for its backlog.
Commission, historically, takes a year and sometimes a year half in investigating charges before due cause is found and i complaints and charges are filed, and though the law requires otice be given to one against whom the complaint has been filed, been the practice of the Commission in the past to wait that year ar and a half before notice is given to the one against whom the aint is filed, whether it be the employer, the union, or the com-ink this is deplorable. This denies to the party charged the opporto try to resolve the question at an early date. Maybe, if timely were given we would not have as many cases presented, maybe ases would be resolved. But if they were not resolved, at least nent of due process would be introduced in giving notice to the charged that he would have the opportunity to gather and ve the evidence with which to sustain himself when formal s are filed and subsequent enforcement proceedings are insti-man from Pennsylvania does say at this late date, yesterday, he put in the Record, and today when I finally saw a copy of his lment, that he intends to offer an amendment for timely notice. s late date I am glad to have this support for this amendment ng due process.

And, talking about due process, I think there are other elem involved in this proposed cease-and-desist authority that the comm bill would give to the EEOC.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yi

Mr. ERLENBORN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Oregon.

I say the subcommittee and the full committee rejected amendment out of hand, and that is the fact, and it is on the rec

Talking about due process, there is another element involved. cease-and-desist approach I think as has been very well pointed by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Railsback), involves what and I—and I hope the majority of the members of this commi would think—is something less than optimum due process. The c mittee bill grants to the Commission the power to receive complai grants to the Commission the power to investigate complaints; gr to individual Commissioners the power to file complaints; grants to Commission the power to prosecute, to adduce evidence; grants to Commission the power to pass upon those elements of evidence t are introduced; grants to the Commission the power to fashion remedy in the form of a cease-and desist order.

Now, it is said that under the Administrative Procedure Act th is a hearing officer, and therefore this introduces an element of f ness. It has been said that the committee structured bill is desig after the procedure that is followed in the NLRB. I would point that this really is not quite accurate. Yes, there is a hearing officer ed, but under the NLRB actually, as a matter of experience, it found that it was desirable to have a separate prosecutor, and not ave the Board be both prosecutor and judge.

in the NLRB you have the Office of General Counsel indeent of the Board. You have there a division of the power to ecute from the power to judge. . ECKHARDT. This is a point I think needs clarification. The gen- n will concede, will he not, that the rule with respect to sub- al evidence in the committee bill is the same rule substantially t in the Labor Relations Act.

. ERLENBORN. Yes, I do concede that. But again I reiterate it is e greater weight of evidence. I am addressing myself to the ent made by the chairman of the full committee (Mr. Perkins). he said it was the greater weight of evidence.

ould ask the gentleman from Texas, since he posed the question to answer my question—do you agree that the chairman of the ittee was correct when he said that substantial evidence requires be the greater weight of evidence?

ECKHARDT. I would merely state that the general rule basically erned by the case of the Universal Camera Corp. against the nal Labor Relations Board.

ERLENBORN. Will the gentleman give me a simple "yes" or "no" r?

ECKHARDT. This is very brief and it simply says that the find- f the Board as to whether or not it is supported by the evidence e conclusive.

court wrote "evidence" to mean "substantial evidence." We said ntial evidence is more than a mere scintilla—it means such rele- vidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to sup- conclusion, citing Consolidated Edison.

Accordingly, it must be more than to create a suspicion of exis of the fact to be established. It must be enough to justify if the were to a jury a refusal to direct a verdict when the conclusion so to be drawn from it is one of fact for the jury.

That is the rule, as I understand it.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, b still has not answered my question whether it was the greater w of evidence or not. I still contend that the gentleman from Kent is a better lawyer than to say that "substantial evidence" is "gr

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAWKINS. You said under the law the court would not review the evidence presented to the Commission in the Commis hearing, and it would be required to sustain the Commission if t were any evidence supporting its findings. That is not a true s ment.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further to the ge man.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to continue with my argument con ing the committee bill.

There are other elements in this bill other than the question of w types of enforcements are most desirable.

The committee bill would transfer to a commission that is alr overburdened with half of the cases that have ever been filed wi thousands of cases that are still pending and that are still unresolv it would transfer additional jurisdiction—jurisdiction now poss by the Civil Service Commission relative to equal employment in eral employment would be transferred to the EEOC. New cove of employees of State and Federal Governments would be provid
the EEOC.

In addition, the authority to proceed in practice or in pattern now exercised by the Justice Department would be transferred t EEOC and, I think, most important of all—and I think we made the point fairly adequately today already—the jurisdiction cised by the Office of Contract Compliance in the Department of L would be transferred to the EEOC.

I think it is important to understand what the jurisdiction of Office of Contract Compliance in the Department of Labor is.
Office of Contract Compliance is not enforcing Title VII rights.
Office of Contract Compliance authority is derived from an Execu order. The jurisdiction of the EEOC is under the 1964 Civil Ri Act, and it is to enforce those constitutional rights of equality the court has found to be within the realm of enforcement that we seeking to grant the enforcement power to the EEOC.

ese are basically constitutional rights and statutory rights under 964 act. It regulates the conduct of affairs between individuals heir employers.

e OFCC is an altogether different type of jurisdiction. It is not upon constitutional rights. It is not based upon statutory rights. e genesis of the power of the OFCC is the contractual relation- hat exists between the Federal Government and those with whom contract for the acquisition of goods and services. In this juris- on the OFCC can and does go beyond those powers granted by 964 Civil Rights Act. I think it is important to note that the man of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission him- as testified that you cannot mix these two enforcement authori- Ie testified before our committee this year against the transfer of C jurisdiction. Chairman Brown testified against the transfer of ittern or practice jurisdiction exercised by the Justice Depart- and he testified in favor of the court-enforcement approach that ressman Mazzoli and I have embodied in H.R. 9247.

re are one or two additional points I would like to make. I have about the timely notification to a party who is charged. We find hat a party who is charged and goes through the present conciliа- rocess can also be subject to private action under the present 1964 Rights Act. If the complaining party loses that case, another ay be filed in proper circumstances by that same party before LRB. If the complainant loses that case, a fourth action can be nder the old Civil Rights Act of 1866.

At the present time there seems to be it to how far back pay awards can be made on behalf of a party ins one of these actions, except to the beginning of the act, which e effective date of 1965.

have class actions where the Commission admittedly encourages dual complainants to file suits on their own behalf and for the class that may be similarly affected.

s, plus the liability of backpay without limitation, would create rrendous potential liability. We would provide a limitation on ty through a 2-year statute of limitations. I would admit again he majority as represented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania id, belatedly, that if they are given the opportunity, they would pply a 2-year statute of limitations.

my attempt to have that adopted in committee was rejected.

would also provide in a class action a limitation so that those oin in the class action or those who by timely motion intervene be considered as the proper class, but not all who may be simi- situated but who are not even aware of the fact that a case has iled.

feel that, because we have greater elements of due process, be- we would give the enforcement authority to the Federal district —where, in our opinion, timely relief can be given to the com- ng party—our approach is preferable.

I would point out, contrary to what the gentleman from Il
Mr. Anderson, said, that those areas where we have the greatest ber of EEOC complaints are not the same areas where we ha greatest backlog in the district courts. I refer the Members minority views in the report of the committee.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I yield to the gentleman from the Distr Columbia.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, this is now directed to the argu raised by the gentleman in the well, and the gentleman from Kent and the gentleman from Wisconsin, to the effect that cease-and-power should not be given to EEOC. I have simply two ques Would the gentleman be in favor of withdrawing cease-and-powers from the Federal Trade Commission and from the Secu and Exchange Commission and from other commissions?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I think I understand the gentleman's questio derstand what the gentleman's question is. I think there are two of Federal agencies that have cease-and-desist powers. Primarily are regulatory agencies. The only exception in the Federal Go ment that has that authority is the NLRB.

The answer is yes. I would withdraw the cease-and-desist power the NLRB. I would rather have those cases resolved in court.

I would point out under the committee bill, which is also the p dure under the NLRB, the cease-and-desist orders are not self-en
ing. The only time one gets enforceable orders under the NLR under the committee bill is if one goes to the court. That is the place to get effective relief. That is recognized in the NLRB. Th sue an order. It is not self-enforcing. They must then go to the Ci Court of Appeals.

It is also true that before our Education and Labor Committ the same time we were considering giving cease-and-desist type au ity to EEOC, another subcommittee was considering the question why there was a great backlog on cases and a denial of justice i NLRB situation. Even after the NLRB issues an order, even they go into court before it gets to effective judicial relief t parties.

Mr. FAUNTROY. I have asked the gentleman a two-part questio

Mr. ERLENBORN. I have answered one, I hope.

Mr. FAUNTROY. I asked if the gentleman was in favor of withd ing the enforcing authority of the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I understand the gentleman's question. Let m spond to the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield to the gentl further.

I would say, in response to the gentleman's question, the Fe Trade Commission at this very time has recommended to this Con legislation they sent up requesting the authority to go into the eral district court. They exercise cease and desist authority. They found it is not the best way to approach enforcement, and the Fe Trade Commission today is asking that we give them the kin power that H.R. 9247 would give the Equal Employment Oppo nity Commission.

Mr. Chairman, we feel, and I think with good reason, that the of due process would best be served and the best type of enforce authority would be given the Equal Employment Opportunity on if our substitute H.R. 9247 is adopted. We feel the committee oes far ahead in giving additional jurisdiction to a commission dy overburdened and, under their bill, it will be given new duties rform.

also feel that the cause of due process will best be served if our itute is adopted providing a limitation on class actions, providing y notice so that the parties may defend and protect themselves, roviding a statute of limitations so that back-pay awards cannot ndered in the year 2000 all the way back to the year 1965, as the s apparently are holding at the present time.
r these reasons, I hope that this committee will support the sub-e bill when it is offered, and I hope that then, as provided in the itute bill, the enforcement authority will be given to the Com-n by the passage of the bill.
DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from land (Mr. Mitchell).
r. Mitchell asked and was given permission to revise and extend

MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, I only wish I had a sufficient amount ney, I wish that I were independently wealthy, so that I could packed in the galleries today the thousands of cases I know of oor and the black and other minorities who have sought to work the system, who have sought to avail themselves of adminis-e redress, and have found that the administrative agency far too turns out to be a paper tiger. They get no redress.

were given cease-and-desist power under our State commission rily because it was recognized that the cease-and-desist order is bludgeon, as the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky alluded to it as. It is not a bludgeon, but it is a phychological weapon c for the decency of people to manifest itself so that there will be redress.

This has been a long and tortuous debate this afternoon, an we must deal with the realities. I believe I am advantaged over of you in dealing with them, simply because I go to my district night. I represent the Baltimore area and I can get there daily.

The questions asked me by whites run like this: "What is w with the black folks? Why are they not satisfied with the gains have been made?"

And the question put to me by blacks in the district is, "When the promises be fulfilled? When will there be a delivery on a promises of the past?"

I heard my distinguished colleague from Illinois speak e today about his concern over the deepening fissure that exists i society. It is a deepening one which is polarizing us day by day hour by hour. I can almost feel it, and if you have any sensitivity you will be able to feel it, too.

How do you resolve this problem. You do it by delivering o unfulfilled promise. You resolve it by giving to those agencies o Government which have the charge to implement legislation an power to do so effectively.

I heard someone say earlier today let us get the legislation thr on a compromise. There are compromises presented to us, mo which are acceptable, but on cease and desist there can be no com mise. The question that will be put by young black men and w and Mexican-Americans and others is this: You have compron gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Pucinski).

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to ask the ch man of the subcommittee a question for the purpose of establis some legislative history here.

He will offer an amendment which will provide that the Com sion shall be prohibited from requiring a quota for preferential t ment with respect to the numbers of employees or percentage employees of any class, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

I am puzzled and troubled with the word "quota," because in Philadelphia plan the administration had very stubbornly insi and there was extensive debate on the floor of the House here, that were not using quotas in Philadelphia but they were using "go What I want to know is whether or not the use of the word "qu e in this amendment applies to "goals" or any other phraseology ch in effect would require an employer to employ a certain amount people of various racial and ethnic categories mentioned here.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman asked me the question yesterday, and I ked up the word "goals" and I cannot find where goals has any ific meaning that would lend it to any plan which would say a cernumber of quota. The word "quota" is a very plain word.
Mr. PUCINSKI. Does the prohibition against "quota" in this amend-t apply to "goals" or to any other method or scheme used by the inistrators of this act?
Mr. DENT. I would say the word "quota" and the prohibition of as in the Commissions' administration of the Federal contract pliance program means exactly what it is intended to mean, that er any condition this Commission cannot establish a set number uota of workers in any category that must be present.
r. PUCINSKI. If they plead as they did in the case of the Philadel-plan that they were not establishing quotas but merely estabng goals, this would be interpreted as meaning they are in viola-of this act.
r. DENT. That is right, if what they are establishing is a quota or erential treatment.
r. PUCINSKI. Now, do I further understand that this amendment, he CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has ex-

d.
r. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 minute.
r. PUCINSKI. Then, do I also understand that this amendment ns that Title VII which specifically prohibits the establishment of as would, indeed, apply to this act and to the actions of the Equal loyment Opportunity Commission under this act? s the gentleman knows, in the case of the Philadelphia plan, the rt held that Title VII did not apply because the plan was ordered er an Executive order. m I correct in concluding that this amendment would provide that e VII restrictions on quotas, goals, or any other schemes which may sed would apply to the Equal Employment Opportunity Com-ion?
r. DENT. The courts said that Title VII of the civil rights bill do pply to the Executive order. In other words, the Executive order rsedes both the Constitution as well as the law passed by the gress of the United States.
That we are trying to do is bring the operations of the contract pliance program back within the law which Congress passed.
r. PUCINSKI. And, this amendment would bring Title VII into this mission's activities? In other words, if this amendment is adopted, Commission cannot claim it as exempt from Title VII of the civil ts act nor can the Commission require quotas or goals in assign-job distribution?
r. DENT. Right; it cannot require quotas.
r. PUCINSKI. I thank the gentleman.
r. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, at this time I have no further quess for time. I reserve the balance of my time.
r. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Drinan).

(Mr. Drinan asked and was given permission to revise and extend remarks.)

Mr. Drinan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1746, Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act, under wh the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission will be ena for the first time not merely to conciliate with employers who engaged in discriminatory practices or to petition them at frustra length, but to negotiate with them purposefully, from strengt

I strongly favor this bill over alternative measures because I convinced that while discrimination in employment does not inevit resist suasion to the point where judicial remedies are required, discrimination does not invariably yield to words alone. There m be enforcement authority within the Commission, and the most app priate type of enforcement authority in this instance is that of cease-and-desist power. That power was originally contemplated the drafters of the underlying legislation, and is long overdue.

Title VII of the landmark Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits criminatory employment practices based on race, color, religion, or national origin.

Until now the EEOC has relied chiefly upon persuasion to g voluntary compliance with the provisions of Title VII. Too often t approach has meant that the victims of discrimination have contin to be excluded from union membership or from raises and promoti or excluded from rewarding employment altogether.

Between 1964, when it was established, and 1969 the Commiss failed in more than half of the 35,445 cases it investigated to achi even a partially successful conciliation agreement.

Moreover, discrimination is not abating notwithstanding the pr ises of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. It is mounting yearly. In fiscal y 1969 the EEOC received 12,148 charges of discrimination; in fi year 1970, 14,129 charges. In the first 7½ months of fiscal year 197 had already received 16,644 charges. That is more than the numbe charges received for all of fiscal year 1970, and already more than fourth as many as it received during the entire first 5 years of existence.

Behind the impersonal statistics of charge, recommendation investigation, and of cases unresolved there stand many millions working people—women, blacks, Indians, Chicanos, and other mi ities—who are being thwarted, exhausted, and indeed, enraged inequality, and whose invaluable skills are thereby lost to our soci if not set destructively against it.

For women and blacks the inequities left remediless by the Comm sion have been particularly outrageous.

An EEOC report released in February 1971 revealed that in building trades the percentage of black workers in 1970 had actu declined to 6.8 percent from 7.4 percent in 1969. Cease-and-de power would enable the EEOC to secure compliance by the build trades with the goals of equality which the Civil Rights Act of 1 rightly elevated into a national project.

Title VII specifically prohibits sex discrimination. But the disgr of discrimination against women has been so pervasive that contin almost up to the present it has borne the insulting status of a ridic injustice. In 1968 60 percent of women earned less than $5,000 only 20 percent of men; 28 percent of men earned more than $10 but only 3 percent of women.

It is also a telling fact that while a woman with 4 years of college s earning, in 1968, an average of $6,694 per year, the average earn-gs of men with only an eighth grade education were almost the same, 580.

Against this background of widespread discrimination, an EEOC rmed principally to rely upon voluntary compliance is a frail and dequate resort. The situation is summarized in concise terms in e report of the Committee on Education and Labor on H.R. 1746:

t has been the emphasis on voluntariness that has proven to be most detri-ntal to the successful operation of Title VII. In cases posing the most profound sequences, respondents have more often than not shrugged off the Commisn's entreaties and relied upon the likelihood of the parties suing them.
'acts, statistical evidence and experience demonstrate that employers, labor anizations, employment agencies and joint labor-management committees conue to engage in conduct which contravenes the provisions of Title VII. The stence of such practices demonstrates the immediate need to effectuate the pures of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Not only is the number of cases of discrimination increasing every r, they are also becoming more difficult and complex. A pertinent mple is the fact that the already unmistakable distress of our es—some have called it agony—is being aggravated by a major new eat with obvious implications for the EEOC and H.R. 1746: the reasing migration of large and important companies to suburbia, ving minority workers trapped, without jobs or decent housing, in ttos.

During the 1960's the white population of the central cities declined, tly due to these transfers of businesses, by nearly 2 million people, ile the minority population increased by nearly 3 million. This is ctly the kind of incendiary polarization which the Kerner Commisn warned against in 1968:

ur nation is moving toward two societies, one black, one white—separate and qual. . . . Discrimination and segregation have long permeated much of Amer-life; they now threaten the future of every American.

n the case of these large urban corporations, as well as in the area mployment discrimination generally, it is important not to disrupt ously the employer-employee relationship or operations. Settle-nt out of court and, where at all possible, short of administrative orcement, should remain the goal of the Commission. An important pose of the EEOC is to enable employers and employees to live with n other without continuing bitterness and friction. In my view, refore, the chief advantage of granting cease-and-desist power to Commission is that the very possibility of this sanction would tend timulate settlement. This has been the general experience and value dministrative enforcement. In the NLRB, for example 95 percent nfair labor practice cases are resolved administratively.

Using the possibility of administrative enforcement in order to see settlement before enforcement is a tested procedure. It has sup-d the effective foundation for regulatory agencies for more than e decades. It has been the mainstay, for example, of state fair em-yment practices commissions, the Securities Exchange Commission, Federal Trade Commission, the National Labor Relations Board the Federal Communications Commission.

Under H.R. 1746's cease-and-desist provisions both sides will know the Commission's mediating role is backed if necessary by more pelling process. The employer will know that an unyielding or ely dilatory stance may result in the stigma and possible penalties of an enforceable Commission order. It will be obvious to both em ployer and employees that the Commission need not and will not perm itself to be exploited by either side for harassment or delay.

I have emphasized the cease-and-desist provisions of H.R. 1746 b cause they are so clearly the prime vehicle by which the bill wou invigorate the EEOC. But H.R. 1746 would also enact two other qui fundamental changes in the present law, changes not contained in H. 9247. These provisions would broaden and consolidate the EEOC jurisdiction.

First, the broadened jurisdiction would enable the Commission cover 10.1 million State and local government employees now exclud from coverage by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. As of Ma 30, 1970, minorities accounted for 19.4 percent of the total number Federal employees. But minorities constitute only 2 percent of indivi uals in the GS–16 through GS–18 grades. We are proud of our spac program, but only 2.9 percent of NASA's employees are black. Th Federal Aviation Administration employs 1,612 supervisory and ad ministrative personnel. But only 13 of these individuals are black.

Jurisdiction under H.R. 1746 would also be expanded to includ employees of educational institutions, presently exempted, and unions and companies of at least eight workers or members, instead the 25 required by present law. This latter provision would exten protection to 9.5 million workers not covered under the present law under the proposed H.R. 9247.

Second, H.R. 1746 would consolidate within the EEOC the presen ly diffused responsibility for enforcing equal employment opportunity Currently the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, the Civil Servi Commission, and the Justice Department all exercise part of a fr quently overlapping and confused obligation. As an example of th encumbering overlap, the committee report cites a 1969 court cas Zellerbach Corp. against United States, where the union and employe had settled with the EEOC but were then subjected to Federal cou litigation, action by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, an finally a suit by the Justice Department. Accountability to sever overlapping authorities is mutually defeating. In practice it may r sult in no accountability.

I would like to emphasize the central importance in problems of em ployment relations of reaching a solution outside of court—given th legacy of bitterness and distrust often attendant upon protracte trials—and if possible before administrative enforcement. Specifica ly I would stress four points: First, the courts have neither the tim nor the experience to be the principal forum for unraveling compl cated discriminatory practice cases; second, court intervention is e pensive, protracted, and disruptive for employer and employees alik third, court action is least desirable where, as in EEOC matters, th parties are likely to be involved in an ongoing relationship that ma only be undermined by the formalized procedural combativeness im plicit in a judicial trial; and fourth, the EEOC has already acquire and will continue to accumulate the experience and insight whic bolstered by the cease and-desist power can best encourage meanin ful settlement.

I do not believe business has any justifiable fears about the effe of H.R. 1746. Indeed, the processes which this bill would implemen would, I am convinced, save businesses time, money, and bitter perso nel morale problems.

I support H.R. 1746 as a measure soundly designed in the overall erest not only of employers and workers, women and minorities, of a free society which necessarily requires freely developed ent and industry.

Mr. Nix. Mr. Chairman, as perhaps in your own experience, I know m individual cases that treatment in employment for minority ups has not substantially improved since the 1964 Civil Rights Act. n some cases, a better job might not be merited. But—of those with om I have counseled—many committed themselves to a serious, exsive and time-consuming effort to become trained and educated order to qualify for particular employment. You can readily apciate the disillusionment of an applicant who is rejected solely ause of race, creed, color, or sex.

ly own experience is corroborated by a newspaper article of Sun last, headed "Report Finds Minority Job Bias Remains."

t was an Associated Press article, printed throughout the coun. I assume many of you have read it, and I would like to ask persion to insert it in the Record following my remarks.

olid research and statistics are available to substantiate the findis of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The conclun is that women and minority group workers—blacks, Spanishnamed Americans, Orientals, and American Indians—still are ely underrepresented in the more remunerative jobs of private ustry. We are all aware, too, the Federal Government has an even se record in this regard.

Vithout stronger enforcement authority in the EEOC—with mere iliation pressures available—we cannot hope to see improvement he performance of that Commission.

nd—if we do not provide the tools for it to improve its record—not we, here in Congress, foster and exacerbate disillusionment skepticism among the poor, the black, the women, all minority ups, and all those who have been rejected because of their religious efs or national origin?

s these fellow humans are delayed in their rights—thwarted in r striving to advance economically—their thoughts become the nts of the actions they will undertake.

Ve all know how injustices rancor. It does not have to be spelled after witnessing the destructive riots of the sixties.

The facts in discrimination are indisputable. I hope you have all n time to read the House Report, No. 92–238 of June 2, submitted our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. wkins).

f you will but study this report, and the recent letters from Consmen Hawkins, Ogden Reid and John Dent, I have every conce you will today fully support H.R. 1746.

n addition to improving the EEOC procedures with cease-andst methods of enforcement, H.R. 1746 has other great advantages the substitute bill that is being proposed here today.

I.R. 1746 would end the jumble of confusions in the field of equal ortunity by centralizing and coordinating the Federal Governt's efforts in dealing with the problems of employment discrimina-here are presently four Government agencies dealing with such disination. The Department of Labor, the Attorney General, the il Service Commission and the EEOC all now process different phases of this problem. Consolidating all the functions relating t employment discrimination under the EEOC is not only a most logica step, but in the long run would prove to be the most efficient and leas expensive.

In the substitute bill, H.R. 9247, decisions on employment discrimi nation would be routed through the already overburdened courts. I is obvious such cases can be processed with more expediency throug the expert, bipartisan Commission, rather than becoming a judicia function.

I must finally emphasize that the Equal Employment Opportunit Commission is oftentimes the sole recourse, the only avenue for re dress for those who are discriminated against; for those who will n longer meekly accept unequal treatment in employment—or any othe phase of their walk in this world.

These are men and women altogether like ourselves—if rejected because of race, color, creed, or sex, we would surely ask why?—and why is it not corrected?

What a man feels intently—he will struggle to speak out of him—to see represented in visual shape. And this is what H.R. 1746 would be to many Americans: a reality they can read in the law to aid a man in his fight against economic injustice.

I ask all of you who believe in the principle of equality for all people to reject the substitute bill, H.R. 9247, and unanimously pass the bill recommended by the Committee on Education and Labor H.R. 1746.

[From the Washington Star, Sept. 12, 1971

REPORT FINDS MINORITY JOB BIAS REMAINS

Minority groups and women continue to be discriminated against by employers the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission reported yesterday.

Data compiled by EEOC's Office of Research show that women and minority group workers—blacks, Spanish-surnamed Americans, Orientals and American Indians—still are largely under-represented in high-paying jobs of private industry.

Almost 8 out of 10 black male workers toil at the three lowest-level job classifications—semi-skilled operatives, unskilled laborers and service workers—according to a survey of private industry employers by the EEOC.

Black female workers fared slightly better. While 13 percent of the black males worked at white-collar jobs, 37.8 percent of the black women workers were in white-collar positions, the survey showed. Most of the black women engaged in white-collar work share the problem of women in general—that of being relegated to the lowest paying office jobs, the report said.

In 1970, women made up 34 percent of the total working force, but only 2.3 percent held managerial positions, as opposed to 12.4 percent of the men, EEOC said.

Among black males, only 1.7 percent held managerial or policymaking jobs while only 1 percent of the Spanish-surnamed American workers were in the managerial category.

[Mr. HANNA addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, at this time I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Eckhardt).

(Mr. Eckhardt asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee bill, not to make any manner of speech with respect to its merits, but to put to rest some bug bears that have been raised concerning that bill and, also, I think to disclose some real bears in the thicket of H.R. 9247, the Erlenborn amendment.

I would like to point out, in the first place, that the procedure ovided for in this bill is largely patterned after the Labor-Manage-nt Relations Act; that is, after the Taft-Hartley Act.

I have practiced under that act through four Presidents and, of urse, that means somewhat different boards. I must say that the ocess before a trial examiner in all of those circumstances is a narkably good process. Indeed, this has been recognized by the esident of the United States.

I have here a letter headed, the White House, Washington, May 9, 70, which states in part as follows:

> Our Federal judiciary provides a vital public service in trying the thousands cases each year that affect the interests of both Government and private zens.
> The long and impressive record of the Federal Trial Examiners is well known oughout the legal profession, and it is not only as your President, but also a lawyer I am particularly aware of your outstanding contributions to our ety.

t is signed "Richard Nixon."

I had the same experience. I see no reason why trial examiners ointed under the authority of the Administrative Procedure Act, life, will not be excellent triers of fact.

This bill, just as the Taft-Hartley bill does, ultimately rests the ision upon the law and upon whether or not there was substantial dence on the record of the hearing as a whole to sustain the judg-nt of the trial examiner, whom I believe they call the "hearing ers" here.

Now, what is the measure of that review? The measure is not the row review that excludes a consideration by the court of the ole evidence. It is not the kind of tricky review the right to which y be forfeited because one line of findings of fact would support decision. The decision on the whole record must be considered and, eve me, anyone who has tried cases before trial examiners, and ultimately gotten a favorable judgment through them and through Labor Board, and then finds himself thrown out on his ear by Fifth Circuit Court—and I have had that happen to me—knows t the review is not a narrow review, it is a review that goes to the stion of whether or not the ultimate decision was reasonably unded, had a reasonable, factual basis to support the ultimate ision.

n labor cases you have very much the same type of problem as is olved in this kind of proceeding. You have a proceeding in which re is a considerable admixture of fact and law, and, therefore, a e discretion on the part of the court to strike down if the facts, er the law, do not support the decision.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ECKHARDT. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mich-n.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with the gentlemen would the gentleman not further concede that the review made by court of a hearing reviews both substantive and procedural ques-is alike?

Mr. ECKHARDT. There is no question but that that is true, and fre-ntly those substantive and procedural questions involve an inter-meshing of fact and law that becomes very difficult to remove from the jurisdiction of a court. And of course ultimately the Supreme Court may strike down the decision if it is not reached in accordance with the spirit of the act.

I think that this act, even more than the Labor Act, envelopes fact and law in the same package.

Mr. CONYERS. If the gentleman will yield further, then in that sense the cease-and-desist orders provide more opportunity for review on the part of the defendant than this cumbersome method presented in the Erlenborn amendment?

Mr. ECKHARDT. I think it is better than the Erlenborn amendment because of course one thing that is not recognized by the author of that amendment, or at least has not been recognized in his presentation on the floor, is that the appellate court is also limited by the fact determination by the trial court.

We are dealing here with situations that involve the same kind of special expertise, with respect frequently to a problem involving a complex seniority system in a plant, that exists in the case of the NLRB cases. This kind of case is particularly appropriate for determination by persons who have developed a kind of expertise, and can devote a week or two to a trial. Now, if you load this type of case calling for special expertise and demanding much time for trial, if you load this field of new law on the courts, you are calling upon Federal judges to decide the myriad of questions that arise before them in whatever time it takes, perhaps 2 or 3 weeks and you are calling upon them to learn a new area of law.

So I submit that exactly for the same reasons that the Labor Board is set up in the manner that it is, with the trial examiner system, this system must be so established; otherwise one or two things will occur: either you will not be able to get to trial before a Federal court in one of these discrimination cases or else you will so heavily load the Federal court's docket that other lawyers will not be able to get to try their pressing cases.

Now I would like to point out a few of the real bears in the thicket of the Erlenborn bill. You will note that the Erlenborn bill establishes preemption against the application of any other laws which might affect an unlawful employment practice.

I have the bill before me some place, but I think that has also been gone over by the author of it.

Of course, this means that if the present provision is the exclusive provision controlling all matters relating to questions of fair employment practices, then the Erlenborn bill repeals the Civil Rights Act of 1866 where it touches upon this field.

As you recall, the Civil Rights Act of 1866 is the legislative machinery which puts into effect the rights guaranteed under the 13th and 14th amendments.

The Erlenborn bill by preempting the field removes these provisions from effectiveness in a case covered within the scope of this act.

The Erlenborn bill also ousts the National Labor Relations Board jurisdiction over job bias.

You will recall that section 7 of the Labor Act makes it the duty of a union to represent all of its employees—all of the employees of a plant and not those that it may select as those to be represented. It provides, and the courts have held, that it is an unfair labor practice a labor union not to properly represent black people within the on; and where seniority provisions discriminate against blacks, re is the basis, under section 7 of the act, for a complaint that the son was not properly represented.

he Erlenborn amendment, it seems to me, would clearly preclude area of right which now exists for persons whose employment its may be invaded.
he Erlenborn amendment abolishes class actions. It would wipe class actions in the area of equal employment opportunity. In this the courts have held that equal employment actions are custom-y class actions whether they are so categorized or not.
ut this amendment would prohibit bringing class action suits on alf of a whole class of persons—blacks, women, and so forth, who be all suffering the same discriminations.
he CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
r. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further.
r. Chairman, about 7 years ago, amidst a great fanfare nation-and with no little notice being given in the foreign press, Cons enacted Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. At that time were breaking new ground in serious legislation dealing not only the physical or economic welfare of the people of this Nation, but dealing in an area in which we had trod very slowly and carefully re.
eople have asked me many times: "You were the son of an immi-
t. Your people were at one time discriminated against. Why did your group as a nationalistic group make the same requests that being made today by other groups?" say the difference is this. My people escaped from a very poor ant life, and they came here to try to make themselves a better of life, not so much for themselves, but for their children and their ren's children. They had never had any schooling. They had r had any education. They did not know they had rights. I can re the Members that there was no television, nor any "ambulance-ing" lawyers to advise my people they had rights, and could use
. They had no knowledge of these things. So maybe ignorantly, observing what they had come here to do and following steady on that path, they took the menial jobs, they built the railroads, dug the mines, they extracted the coal, they worked the steel mills, they built the homes and the schools in this country—ofttimes other children than their own—but they did provide for their chilan opportunity to get that which they were seeking, a better way fe.
their generation did not play around as it were with the so-called ts that we are demanding today for our people. But this group awakened us 7 years ago to the realization that something had done were educated in the American schools and were part of the rican scene and were citizens of this country fluent in the lange. They pointed out they were being put into an economic level use of something that we were not afflicted with insofar as accept-into the broad society of our people. this Congress—and to its credit—tried to write legislation meet-all the objections of the various sections and sectors and desires of our country, and its economic levels; but we failed, and I will tell breeds a sort of discrimination that you cannot tolerate. It might s Members why we failed. We failed because we gave with one hand took away with the other. We created a commission and gave i power to do anything. It has taken us a long time to realize what gentleman from Illinois, to his everlasting credit, said so well, to which I would hesitate to add one word or to even interpret for

He said that if we are sincere in wanting to do what all of us we want to do, then we must give this Commission power. How d give it power? We give it the power to issue cease-and-desist or

The history of FEPC, the history of civil rights in the various St of the Union, proves beyond a doubt this is the only way for a pe ful, trustful approach to this very, very controversial subject befor

The State of Pennsylvania was one of the first States in the Unio pass a law establishing an FEPC. I was fortunately one of the spon of that act. Because of my position in the leadership at that tim handled the legislation.

However, we were at that time no wiser than we were in the Cong 7 years ago. We did not give our FEPC cease-and-desist pow and we started to get exactly what we have reaped under the pres Federal law—a backlog of cases that will not be heard for 10 or years.

Justice delayed is justice denied. In this case we cannot deny just because the justice of equal rights is fundamental. There is noth material one can feel and see, but it is nevertheless, a concept of a p ciple of life to which this Nation is dedicated.

So, within 3 years, after piling up cases that would smother courts of that State, we granted our FEPC the cease-and-desist pow
Now it is a rare, rare occasion that a case need go to court.

The 34 States in the Union that have enforceable laws of this ch acter and nature—each in turn—have had to put cease-and-desist po in their laws.

At present, the EEOC has a backlog of over 26,000 cases. I h heard complaints here about how long the delay on the NLRB ca Imagine dumping in the Federal courts of the United States th 26,000 cases, and approximately 15,000 to 20,000 more that would created the minute the ambulance-chasing lawyers find what they do under this act.

I say to the Members, in all sincerity, if they want to see this p ticular law become the effective public act we intend it to be—and I this to my good friends in the South, and to my good friends in East, the West, and the North, and I say it to all of us regardless our ethnic backgrounds, the color of our skins, our affiliations of kind of our sexes—the one just thing we can do is to have the peo believe that we are trying to help them, to have the people in the sm communities believe we are trying to find a solution for them.

Imagine what would happen in a State like mine, with the appell courts hanging one on the Atlantic Ocean and the other on the O River, with nothing in between but small communities. Imagine hav to go to those appellate courts, the only two jurisdictions we have, o case involving an employee charged with a rather minor infract of this particular law, of having to go down with his own lawyer fight the mighty Office of the Attorney General of the United Sta y, half of the little businessmen in my town would do exactly what y have done many times before. They would give up.

Ve do not want them to give up. If they are not guilty of an infracn they should not be made to accept the guilt because they do not e the money, the time or the courage to go before the high and hty Attorney General in each and every appeals case.
The history is—and this cannot be denied—that where you have se-and-desist powers, between 95 and 98 percent of the cases are ed before they ever get to a court because we give remedies as well afeguards.
This is equal rights legislation; this is fair treatment legislation.
w can we sit here and try to pass legislation that is not fair to every-y whatever their standing, or their station or their level in life is?
o not care whether it is a big employer of 100,000 employees or a ner drygoods store with eight or nine employees. That is not vant. True justice has to be equal. That is what we are fighting for what the blacks in this country are fighting for—equality of ice, equality of opportunity. They do not want special treatment, pite of what anybody tells you, because special treatment of itself ds a sort of discrimination that you cannot tolerate. It might serve r purpose for the moment, but if it is not sound for the future, for long haul, it is not sound now and you should discard even the ght of preferential treatment. They do not want quotas because as are against the concept of the very Government we are trying to old. Shall we start with quotas and say: "All right. We will have blacks and 15 Italians, 14 Irish, and 11 Slavs" I do not know how would ever divide that great body of Anglo-Saxons, because it rs a multitude of sins.
elieve me when I say that I think some of my friends did themes an injustice; and there are some of them, I believe, who did me njustice. I was not here in the formative stages. At this time I want y that no man in my whole experience as a legislator—and this is 0th year as a legislator—worked harder in the field, in the various es and cities, and spent more time in discussing the matter with ps or has given more of himself, in many cases I know spending own money. I happen to hold the purse-strings and I know he never come to me for fare or anything else in order to handle this slation. I am referring, of course to the gentleman from California . Hawkins). I have never known a man that I have ever worked who had a deeper understanding of the difficulties which we face his legislation, or a greater willingness to give consideration to problems of others. It is that understanding, I think, that we all nt to strive for.
know that a person in my particular district has a different problem the person, let us say, in the ghettos of Philadelphia. I know that person in Georgia who lives in a cotton-growing or a peanut-grow-community or even in the city of Atlanta has different problems.
use that, too, is the essence of our Government. We represent 435 icts here.
is in the hope that the majority of those districts in sending their nbers here will at some point have a majority of that membership of Congress representing the 435 separate districts but in the whole resenting the total of the United States who will vote for a certain e of legislation. If we said that it had to be unanimous, there would never be any law. If we said that it had to be less than a majority, th would be chaos.

So it is when you give the consideration that the gentleman fr California has given when I came back and discussed the problem w him. He understands that it cannot be exclusively the thought of person or the needs of one district that is mandatory, and that it is upon this basis that the act must pass. It has to be a conglomerate n consolidated under one piece of legislation.

I know it is not perfect. There are a lot of problems in here. But I not believe we should vote for a piece of legislation that wipes out Equal Pay Act of 1963 for women that was passed by the Congr with the clear understanding that the matter of sex should not b determination of how much is paid for a particular job when it is p formed by both sexes. The substitute proposal by the gentleman fr Illinois wipes it out under the section of the act dealing with exclus remedy.

The Erlenborn substitute would establish, as is said in the let which he sent to us, a 2-year back pay liability. The Hawkins b goes further. If there is a liability for over 2 years—and I think all understand that economics and the need for common sense in e nomics. Today you go back to the date of the passage of the act a you could very easily create an injustice greater than the justice y were giving or trying to give. So we have a statute of limitations su as we have in all of our departmental procedures.

Mr. Chairman, many of my friends today were telling me that th had committed themselves against the committee bill. Now, they d not commit themselves so deeply to the Erlenborn amendment but had a very strange sensation that what they were saying to me w "I am committed against the committee bill." Then, by virtue of th statement that gives support to the Erlenborn substitute. Howeve I asked a couple of them, "Are you committed to the Erlenborn su stitute?" They said, "If that is all I have to select from."

Well, now, it is hard and difficult in the last moment of debate the floor when, as has been said very clearly by the gentleman fro Louisiana and by the gentleman from Michigan, few of us take t time to listen to the debate. So, if your mind is already made up having committed yourself to a proposition 3 months ago, to a pie of legislation proposed 3 months ago, I say it is no longer the sa animal that was put in the coop as a pup. It has grown to full grow and it has grown different spots.

How can I, how can you, help this committee make these Membe who committed themselves to a piece of legislation before they sa all of the amendments, before they saw the final typewritten co of what we are trying to do, change their mind.

So, Mr. Chairman, what I intend to do at the proper moment is put into the Record the amendments we are going to offer tomorro at their proper places in the copy of the bill in order that the Erlenbo amendment or substitute which will be presented for the Record toni as an official substitute will be followed by our amendments. Then, am sure that the Members of Congress will have an opportunity read and study the conditions which would be created by both pie of legislation.

r. Chairman, I am disturbed because I know that unless we can the trust and the belief that our intention is honest on the part of e so adversely affected by the conditions that brought on the pas-of the first Civil Rights Act, and unless they believe that their gress is trying to do something for them to settle their cases and to t them appropriate relief and set a precedent and a record of ory that will enable us to resolve the oncoming cases as rapidly as ible, unless we do that, we should not pass any legislation—let it in its haphazard, bungling way in the same manner in which it been going down the pike during the last 7 years, creating more understanding and injustice. Give us a precedent that will be good omorrow, one upon which we can rely, give us a remedy or a nondy, but let us put into their hands something on which they can rm their faith in the workings of democracy.

he CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has red.

he Clerk will read.

he Clerk read as follows:

it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United s of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Equal oyment Opportunities Enforcement Act".

NDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. ERLENBORN

r. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment in the re of a substitute.

The bill, H.R. 9427 may be found on p. 141.)

r. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the rd.

he CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman Illinois?

here was no objection.

he CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) is gnized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

r. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

r. ERLENBORN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

r. DENT. Would the gentleman object to a unanimous-consent re-to allow the original bill to be considered as read and printed in Record?

r. ERLENBORN. I would object to that, because I think the substitute ld be considered first.

he CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has objected to the st of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

he gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) has offered his amend-in the nature of a substitute which is to be considered as read, printed in the Record in full.

he gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) is recognized for 5 utes in support of his amendment.

Ir. Erlenborn asked and was given permission to revise and nd his remarks.)

r. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, at this point I think the merits of mendment that I have just offered as opposed to the merits of the mittee bill have been thoroughly debated. I might put this in context by saying that it is probably obvious by now that, while the are other peripheral issues that have been debated today, the outstan ing difference between the alternatives before us is what type of forcement authority should be granted the EEOC. There are those w say that the cease-and-desist approach is much preferable: that t courts cannot do this job of guaranteeing equal opportunity for e ployment. None of them have addressed themselves to the questi that I would ask now, and I hope maybe would be answered before vote is taken between these two bills and that is: if the courts are inefficient and unable to grant relief in this area, why is it that ov the past many years great strides have been made in the civil rigl field primarily through our Federal courts? Why is it that we lea to the Federal courts the right to enforce equal voting rights, the ci rights law, the questions of integration and desegregation, if the cou are so inept?

I think maybe there is a hangup on the part of those who favor t cease-and-desist approach, and I call your attention to part of the ed torial that appeared in the Wall Street Journal this morning. I wi quote just one or two parts from that. It says:

Most civil rights advocates write off this Republican-backed alternative.

They are talking about my substitute bill in which I am joined b the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Mazzoli) so it is not a Republica approach, it is a bipartisan approach. But, despite that, they say

Most civil rights advocates write off this Republican-backed alternative as predictable move to water down an obviously stronger Democratic approach.

And yet I point out that the committee bill is also sponsored by o Republican and one Democrat, it, too, is a bipartisan approach.

I shall continue to read from the editorial. It says:

Yet it is significant that a growing number of scholars strongly committed civil rights disagree. They doubt that giving the agency cease and desist a thority would be either effective or desirable. They think a sort of knee-je reaction by liberals is blinding them to the potential inherent in the GOP counte proposal.

In his 1971 book, "Black Employment and the Law," (Rutgers Universi Press), Mr. Blumrosen then argues that minorities have been far more succes ful achieving their rights through courts than administrative procedures. H also asserts that state agencies have invariably failed in their own efforts to eradica job bias through administrative cease and desist powers.

This is what is contended as the best and obvious best way to mov
The article continues:

"I doubt whether cease and desist orders could get at the vestiges of bias bett than the courts," declares Bernard Anderson, assistant professor of industry the University of Pennsylvania. "It would take years to build up the guidelin on which to base such orders, but if you had a good case you could be in cou next week."

I think that is important.

Let me explain the other parts of my amendment as I have briefl during general debate.

As to the timely "Service of charges." That is something that shoul have been in the law originally and, certainly, we should add it now those who have charges filed against them should be given timel notice.

So a person bringing an action under this cannot shop around fo another forum on which to base another law suit, we would make t imitations on liability: Testimony before the House General Labor committee by EEOC Chairman Brown established that the posiof EEOC is that remedies—including backpay—for discrimina-acts may reach back to the effective date of the act, July 2, 1965.

s not clear that the courts have so held. However, to preclude the at of enormous backpay liability which could be utilized to coerce loyers and labor organizations into surrendering their fundamenights to a fair hearing and due process, my bill offers a new subsec(h) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. e-5) which limits liability in pattern and practice suits to a period years prior to the filing of a complaint with said court.
ith respect to individual complainants therefore, back pay and r liability is limited to the stautory period for filing, formerly 90 s and extended under this bill to 180 days. The final sentence in ection (h) which limits back pay orders to 2 years is directed to the ern and practice suits authorized under section 707.
is only fair to say that liability should not go back ad infinitum that there should be some reasonable statute of limitations.
r. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my arks and to include at this time amendments in their proper form ollow the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois for the rmation of the House in the printed Record tomorrow.
r. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to

r. DENT. Yes.

r. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the t to object, would that request not be inappropriate in the Com-ee of the Whole and should it not come only in the House? ne CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the request is in statement.

r. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the

of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlem from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

he Clerk read the title of the bill.
he CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on yesterday the Clerk read the first section of the bill, ending on page 1, line 4, and there pending the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the leman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn).
Ir. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Erlenborn ndment.
he CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized 5 minutes.
Ir. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
r. DENT. I am happy to yield to the distinguished Speaker.
r. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I refer the Members to the very convinc- arguments which the gentleman from Pennsylvania made yester- . I believe that all Members of the House, whether they support the mittee or whether they support the Erlenborn amendment, are in or of equal employment opportunities for all citizens. The time has e to implement that desire.
Ir. Chairman, the economic and social conditions in our Nation in . the latter half of the 20th century, continue to frustrate the prin- es of equal rights and equal opportunities envisioned by the found- of this Nation. We are constantly reminded, by statistics from Gov- nent agencies, by articles in the Nation's press, and by the increas- burdens upon this country's social welfare programs, that there t serious economic and social deficiencies in our society. The facts unassailable. They indicate that minorities and women have borne, continue to suffer discrimination in employment, education, and r vital aspects of their existence. Discrimination in employment inues as the major aspect of this inequity, and constitutes a sys- ic denial of essential economic and social progress, stemming from gressional failure to enact effective enforcement provisions to en- the Government to combat these discriminatory employment tices, minorities and women continue to be treated as second-class citizens and are denied the jobs for which they properly qualify. H.R. 1746, the Equal Employment Opportunities Act of 1971, introduces effective and long-overdue enforcement provisions with which to attack the framework of employment discrimination.

The House Committee on Education and Labor, after extensive hearings and careful consideration of the various enforcement schemes available to insure compliance with the national policy of equal employment has determined that the administrative cease-and-desist powers embodied in H.R. 1746 will best attain equal employment for all citizens. However, the opponents to H.R. 1746 propose to strike down the administrative cease-and-desist enforcement provisions of H.R. 1746, and substitute therefor a method of direct court enforcement. In my judgment most of the opposition to our expressions of concern about this bill will be allayed by the Dent substitute.

The present EEOC backlog of cases is cited as conclusive that further delays would result if the additional administrative steps proposed by H.R. 1746 were introduced. This argument, however, ignores the major causes for the current backlog. Because of the lack of any effective enforcement provisions in the Commission, recalcitrant employers have had little reason to strive for successful settlements during the conciliation process. They are well aware that the final burden for obtaining compliance rests with the aggrieved individuals who must bring suit against them in the courts. Therefore, after a pro forma attempt at settlement, many employers will simply refuse to conciliate any further. This ineffectiveness of the conciliation process without adequate enforcement is clearly borne out in the Commission's fifth annual report which shows that in fiscal year 1970, there were only 225 successful conciliations out of 17,000 charges filed. In addition, it is well known that EEOC appropriations have repeatedly been far short of the needs of the agency. This has resulted in the Commission's inability to hire the required investigators and conciliators who are essential for prompt processing of complaints.

The opponents also seek to justify their position by arguing that the administrative cease-and-desist process would be inherently unjust as administered by the EEOC, and that protection of the principles of justice requires that these cases be heard only in the Federal courts. In support of their position, they claim that the EEOC, as an advocate of civil rights, cannot be fair in its assessment of Title VII cases. They also claim that the procedures under Title VII presume a party's guilt before he has been properly heard. Therefore, the agency making the initial finding cannot also adjudicate the final order. In my opinion neither of these statements is correct.

In the first instance, while it is true that the EEOC has been a strong advocate of civil rights, its lack of enforcement powers has forced it to seek other forms of insuring compliance with the provisions of Title VII. Because it could not enforce the rights of aggrieved individuals who had filed complaints before it, the EEOC has resorted to other forms of technical and moral assistance to those individuals. The EEOC's participation as amicus curiae in Title VII suits across the Nation has been the only role that it has been able to play in the enforcement process, and it certainly cannot be condemned for its efforts in this area. EEOC statistics also show a great objectivity in its treatment of the charges that it receives. For example, the Commission has nissed over 50 percent of the charges filed with it, and its findings frequently much less harsh than findings in similar cases by the rts.

The claim that the EEOC is too biased to properly adjudicate the ues in a Title VII case also ignores the procedural safeguards that provided by law in the administrative process. Hearing examiners, example, are hired by the Civil Service Commission and not by the OC. To qualify, applicants for the position of hearing examiner st pass stringent guidelines and requirements set by the Civil Serv- Commission. Cases are submitted in rotation to hearing examiners predetermined schedule, and all proceedings are conducted on the ord to insure adequate judicial review wherever a party feels that e has been bias. The Administrative Procedure Act, which gov- the entire Federal hearing process also has numerous procedural substantive safeguards to protect rights of all parties.

essence, the argument supporting court enforcement over the ad- istrative cease-and-desist enforcement provisions of H.R. 1746 is justified. The assertions that court enforcement provisions would vide more expeditious relief for an aggrieved party are not sup- ed by existing facts. Title VII suits are not simple civil or criminal ons. Their complexity and frequently obfuscated factual develop- t is well recognized among courts and practitioners alike. To in- ate the courts with a massive upsurge of Title VII cases requiring enditure of large segments of a court's time and resources would serve the ends of justice. It can only serve to further aggravate ined court dockets, and lead to longer delays for all litigants in the eral Courts. The complexity of issues and the need for expertise in eloping Title VII litigation requires that the courts be left free to ew those situations where it is determined necessary, while leaving development and ordering of the case to an administrative process er suited to recognizing the problems of this specialized area. The inistrative Procedure Act provides adequate safeguards for all ies to insure an equitable determination of all complaints. The ext of protecting the individual by sending him to an overworked unwilling judiciary, cannot be allowed to subvert the pressing need iminate employment discrimination.

y denying the EEOC the power to enforce its own findings, the onents seek to reduce the agency to second-class status. In like ner, they would relegate the enforcement of civil rights to second- significance and would imply that those individuals whose civil ts have been denied are no better than second-class citizens.

r. Chairman, I believe that the committee has the solution which work. I oppose the Erlenborn amendment. I trust the House will port the position taken by the gentleman who is managing the bill. Mr. Albert asked and was given permission to revise and extend his arks.)

The Committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent) ha 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman and Members, I rise in opposition to th Erlenborn substitute amendment. I do so because I believe it is im portant to explain just what we intend to do on our side this afternoo

We will let the Erlenborn amendment come to a vote of the Hous without offering any amendments whatsoever to it. I believe the issu has to be clear cut. I do not believe anyone is naive enough to feel tha we are trying to fool anybody. Some of us believe it is so importan that we now clarify the issue to the point we know exactly what w stand for and what our vote means.

There can be no plea of ignorance, because in yesterday's actions introduced into the Record, following the Erlenborn substitute, th stitute which I had prepared for the Erlenborn amendment. So n Member of Congress must now in good conscience admit he knows ctly what he is voting for.

illions of dollars are spent by airplane companies, by construction panies, by hundreds of companies, on all types of Government racts. These contracts can now be set aside at the wish and whim n official of the OFCC for any of many reasons.
That has been done by the Executive order is to circumvent the stitution of the United States. The Executive order circumvents civil rights laws. They could not get this sweetheart deal under law passed by this Congress, and they could not get it under the stitution, so they used an Executive order.

e say in my amendments that it was the intent of Congress that e should be no quotas and that there should be no preferential ment. In our amendments we specifically prohibit the use of
as. We prohibit the establishment of preferential treatment and stepping over a person in line because of race, color, creed, reli-
, or sex.
ne CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania expired.
By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. Boggs, Mr. Dent allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)
r. DENT. I know there is a hangup here on the part of the certain ple about cease and desist. We were told yesterday on the floor ny ranking colleague that the FCC is dissatisfied with the ceasedesist enforcement authority which they have and has requested the Congress give it court enforcement powers instead. The is holding onto cease and desist. What they want is what we also giving to the EEOC, that is, the ability to seek preliminary nctive relief.

Now, when a person is charged with a violation of the EEO the charge appears in the paper long before the person charged w the violation ever gets word of it. I have an amendment which s cifically prohibits the divulgence of any information during the formal Commission proceedings. An employer now feels that he condemned in the eyes of the people in the community and in the e of his customers, especially in the case of retail stores.

I beg you to understand that what we are trying to do is to w out the inequities in the law itself. They saw that cease and desist bad thing. Well, cease and desist itself is not bad. It is what is in law that can be bad.

Cease and desist is just another manner of enforcement, and manner of enforcement does not change the character of the la What we are doing is giving another manner of enforcement he It is the same one that is enjoyed by virtually every agency in Government. All we are trying to do is to put into the law an forcement feature to secure justice to all of the citizens of the Uni States. That is all we are trying to do here.

Mr. Chairman, I said to you yesterday and I repeat now that law can make men equal, but there has to be and there must be law to give all men and women equal treatment. That is all we asking for. I know it has been said that all of us are born equ but it stops right there. That is where organized law in a good ciety picks up; after the birth. It says that from the day a person born until his death he shall be given equal treatment. That is strength of our country. That is why the millions of immigrants ca to this Nation to build it into what it is, and that is why we fou the Civil War. It was to try to bring back equal treatment. Noth else.

That is all I am asking for here. I am not asking you to put so thing in the law to give anybody an advantage. I am trying to you to put something in the law to take the advantage away fr somebody. If I did nothing else in this law but wipe out the contr compliance feature and put it under the jurisdiction of the EE where it rightfully belongs and subject to the laws and the crite established by this Congress of the United States and not to ru enacted by Executive order, then I would have done sufficiently.

I beg of you to reassert the authority of this Congress and t back the powers guaranteed to us under the Constitution.

I beg of those who committed themselves months ago, and so of you years ago, without ever waiting to see what was in the b that you cannot plead ignorance. You know what you are doing. you vote for the Erlenborn substitute amendment, you vote for quo you vote for special preferential treatment, you vote for closing do individuals who have entered into contracts that may not be in t same party, who may not be in the same political group, who m not contribute enough on election day. You make possible somethi which we have fought against in labor, something which we sho have destroyed. You are giving quotas and preferential treatment blessing of your vote if you vote for the Erlenborn amendment.

Mr. Boggs. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite numb of words.

(Mr. Boggs asked and was given permission to revise and extend remarks.)

Mr. Boggs. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, 7 years , in the civil rights bill of 1964, we made a promise to all Ameri- ns that regardless of color, creed, national origin, or sex, there uld be no discrimination in employment in this country. Polls ich were conducted by creditable organizations at that time in- ated that the overwhelming majority of the American people ored the enactment of nondiscriminatory legislation in employ- nt.

Americans, with their innate sense of fairness came forth and said t if a man or a woman is trained and qualified, the doors of op- rtunity should be opened to them, whatever their background l from wherever they come.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that was a magnificent promise. But, unfor- ately—like so many other promises it remains unkept.

Since the enactment 7 years ago of this law there have been literally usands of cases of discrimination filed with the Commission. In a ort in yesterday's Wall Street Journal, Mr. Brown, the present airman appointed by the President, indicated that in a great major- of these complaints there had been no effective remedy. I think it is ar that despite the law, despite the congressional intent, despite the ation of the Commission, the effect of the law has been more or nullified.

Mr. Chairman, there is a substantial difference in the gentleman's stitute and the committee bill which I support wholeheartedly, and t is the question of how to attain compliance.

The committee bill says we will use the procedures which have been established in Federal practice by a half dozen or more existing ministrative agencies such as the Securities and Exchange Commis- n, the NLRB, the FTC, the ICC, and others, to issue cease-and- ist orders for compliance—with all the safeguards set forth in the ministrative Procedures Act spelled out.

On the other hand, the gentleman from Illinois says that we will ke an exception in this situation. He says that enforcement will be property of the Federal courts. And, in the literature that has been ulated by the very able gentleman, for whom I have profound re- t, it is argued that there will be better and quicker enforcement der his plan than under the committee plan.

It seems to me that one issue that has been determined here is that present law is ineffective and not helping the people whom it was nded to help. And, so the only issue remaining is: does the commit- approach recommend itself, or does the substitute approach recom- nd itself?

In the opinion of those who have spent many years in Federal ad- nistrative practice, and before Federal agencies, boards, and com- sions, it is the practice of giving administrative commissions the wer to issue orders and to ask for compliance, devised and perfected r a long period of time, which is superior. These administrative rings are conducted under complete due process, with a notice re- rement, and the right to summon witnesses, subpena witnesses, and on, and are presided over by a hearing examiner who has been ined in administrative law, and who owes no responsibility to the agency which has employed him. So he comes there in the same judicial, impartial atmosphere or attitude that a Federal judge has. The only difference is that his whole time is devoted to that one agency, and he has the time and the opportunity to move ahead these complaints.

In the Federal courts today we have an enormous backload of cases. We have some jurisdictions—and I have seen figures, I believe, for one of the New York jurisdictions—where there is a delay of about 38 months or 40 months. In any event, the Federal courts are crowded, packed, and jammed with litigation, and the notion that the thousands of cases now pending before the EEOC could receive expeditious consideration from the Federal court is something that I just cannot believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. Boggs was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, I commend both sides here for trying to resolve the problem of compliance.

I believe that the great strength in America must continue to be the opportunity of our citizens. We built a great Nation with the men and women who came here from everywhere for the opportunity to live and work in freedom.

Today, minority Americans hold but a small fraction of jobs in almost every category. Look at the unemployment figures, and you will see that 5 or 6 percent is the average around the country, but among minorities it is doubled, and in some cases tripled.

So we have made a promise to many of our Americans, many of whom are not so fortunate as those of us who are gathered here. As I see it, the committee bill is an effort to carry out that promise. It does no good to grant a right if you do not provide a remedy. One of the earliest things I learned in law school was that a right without a remedy is no right at all.

Today we are seeking a remedy for a right that we have already granted.

In my humble judgment, the committee bill more adequately grants that remedy than the proposal contained in the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

(Mr. Gerald R. Ford asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the eloquent remarks made by the gentleman from Louisiana include the support of the three amendments that the gentleman from Pennsylvania indicated he would offer if the substitute did not prevail. I make that assumption—is that an accurate assumption?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania indicated yesterday that he would offer three amendments if the substitute amendment were defeated. So I assume that is the vehicle or the legislation, that we will have before us if the Erlenborn substitute is defeated.

If that is the case, I would assume that the gentleman from Louisiana would support this amendment.

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOGGS. I have every intention of supporting those amendments when I get the opportunity and I hope I do get the opportunity and the gentleman from Michigan will make that opportunity available to me.

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. I am glad we clarified that point.

The gentleman from Louisiana during his remarks made this comment—that he wanted to keep the doors of opportunity open to blacks and other minority groups.

One of the amendments to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania does just the opposite. One of the amendments to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in effect, makes it much more difficult for blacks to get a job, particularly in the building and construction industries.

Now the gentleman from Louisiana makes a big point of the unfortunate fact that unemployment today for blacks is higher than it is for whites. I deplore that and I gather that he does too. But, if the gentleman from Louisiana supports this amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, he is making it much more difficult for blacks to get jobs and will help to perpetuate the higher unemployment record for blacks in the United States.

Now let me add this, if I may. I take the floor as a person who voted in February of 1964 for the Civil Rights Act. I believe that was good legislation and I have no compunction about supporting the substitute as a good implementation of that legislation.

Those of us who supported the 1964 act—and I was one of those who did support that act—and I cannot remember how the gentleman from Louisiana voted—I suspect that maybe he voted against it, but I do not know for sure—but I can say that I voted for it. What I want to do is to achieve the best and most equitable way of enforcement. I happen to think that the Erlenborn substitute provides that. We do not have sufficient enforcement provisions under the existing law. That was a deficiency. What we are trying to do now is to get enforcement in a fair, equitable, and judicious way. That is primarily, if not exclusively, why I support the Erlenborn substitute.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the distinguished minority leader yield?

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. I am glad to yield to the gentlewoman.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made reference to the Civil Rights Act—and I joined him in the majority of my party in voting for that in 1964. This was dedicated to the proposition that equal opportunities and equal rights should be available to all.

But, if the gentleman will allow me, I would like to read from Title VII of the Civil Rights Act which was approved by this House in 1964, and this is what the issue is about, today.

(j) Nothing contained in this title shall be interpreted to require any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee subject to this title to grant preferential treatment to any individual or to any group because of the race, color, religion, sex, or national origin of such individual or group on account of an imbalance which may exist with respect to the total number or percentage of persons of any race, color, religion, sex, or national origin employed by any employer, referred or classified for employment by any employment agency or labor organization, admitted to membership classified by any labor organization, or admitted to, or employed in, any prenticeship or other training program, in comparison with the total number percentage of persons of such race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in community, State, section, or other area, or in the available work force in community, State, section, or other area.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan expired.

(On request of Mrs. Green of Oregon, and by unanimous consent Mr. Gerald R. Ford was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. When all of us in this House were present with the Civil Rights Act in 1964, if any Member of the House had come to the well of the House and had said, "When you vote on the Civil Rights Act, you are voting a quota system," I wonder what would have happened. The imposition of a quota system under the Executive order contradicts Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. The imposition of quotas by OFCC destroys labor contracts that have been negotiated on seniority rights. It allows the Office of Contract Compliance to go into a plant, to go into a school system, to go into a college or university—and they have done this in thousands of cases across the country—and say, "We do not agree with the percentage of minority employees to majority employees and we insist that you have this number of blacks in proportion to this number of whites—or the number of another minority to this number of whites.

They have done it in Portland, Oreg. They have done it in Washington, D.C., in the schools here in the District; and this is in direct contradiction to the Civil Rights Act that was passed. We do not need to argue whether the Philadelphia plan is a quota system. I feel sure every Member of this House has had complaints about quotas that the Office of Federal Contract Compliance have ordered. The Erlenborn bill does not touch this matter.

One important issue is whether or not we continue to allow the executive branch under the Executive order to continue to establish and to demand quotas and give special or preferential treatment to some and to deny equal employment to others.

The Erlenborn substitute perpetuates the quota system. The Dent amendment would put an end to the contradiction of the Executive order—Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. The Erlenborn bill is not an equal employment bill. Under the quota system you give special employment rights; you give special preferential treatment to some and in the process job rights are denied others. The civil rights bill was passed to end discrimination. It was not passed to substitute one kind of discrimination for another kind.

If we believe in the Civil Rights Act, including Title VII, it seems to me that we ought to vote to do away with the quota system, which is harmful to this Nation. It is dividing the country and it is accomplishing nothing.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mrs. CHISHOLM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. I am very glad to get the observations and comments of my good friend from Oregon. But let me just make my comment, and then I shall yield to the gentleman from Illinois and the gentlewoman from New York.

Philadelphia plan, which is what we are really talking about, ot have anything to do with quotas. I honestly think that the man from Pennsylvania is drawing a false issue by the kind nguage that he is employing in his proposed amendment. do not think that we ought to interfere with this program with ind of amendment. The Philadelphia plan seeks in all honesty prove the job opportunities for blacks or other minorities. You ve them all the rights in the world, but if you do not give a in a minority status a job, all of those rights really do not mean uch, because he cannot feed his children, he cannot feed him- rights where he does not have a job.

eld to the gentleman from Illinois.

ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I hope that the ution of the gentlewoman from Oregon has not confused the ttee, because the language she read from Title VII of the Civil Act is undisturbed by the committee bill, and undisturbed by lenborn substitute. Neither one is going to repeal the prohibition t quotas that is in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act.

GERALD R. FORD. I thank the gentleman.

ld to the gentlewoman from New York.

CHISHOLM. I thank the gentleman. Would the gentleman agree the EEOC had the right and opportunity to issue cease-and- orders, then it would have to naturally follow that perhaps ld not have to be speaking this afternoon in terms of preferen- otas?

ink we cannot talk about one without connecting it with the have we had to discuss this whole question of preferential ent for one group as contrasted to other groups? It is precisely the EEOC has not had the power to be able to issue the cease- sist orders that will make the construction workers and other do that which they have to do in order to be able to prevent ntial treatment.

GERALD R. FORD. Let me respond to the very appropriate ques- ised by the gentlewoman from New York. In the Erlenborn ute there is a new device for enforcement. It is a different de- om the cease and desist, but it is an effective one, because it s legal action in a court of law, in the Federal courts.

anyone deny that the Federal courts are capable of actually ing orders on discrimination? The Federal court system is fully te to meet the problems. The only difference is in the court of ere there will be an equitable trial with the rules of evidence ling, whereas under the cease-and-desist proposal of the com- we would deny people that fairness and equity.

CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has d.

request of Mr. Boggs, and by unanimous consent, Mr. Gerald d was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Boggs. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

GERALD R. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Boggs. Mr. Chairman, my good friend, the gentleman from gan, has finally gotten down to the difference between these bills.

He points out, and quite correctly so, that the Erlenborn substit provides for a remedy in the courts as compared to the normal adm istrative remedy provided for in the committee bill. Why would gentleman make this profound distinction between human rights the rights which are set forth for the ICC and the NLRB and Securities and Exchange Commission and other Federal agenci

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. Let me respond. It is not appropriate that human rights be considered in the Federal courts? Is it not a pro forum for the consideration of human rights? That is where we h made the most progress in the safeguarding of human rights—in Federal courts. I do not want some administrative agency making cisions on basic human rights. I would have a great deal of faith a trust in the Federal courts.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Mic gan for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I made the point yesterday, and I make it again day, that comparing the cease-and-desist authority in this bill w the authority of the NLRB is false. The NLRB enforcing function separate from the judging function. No such separation of powers provided in the committee bill.

As far as whether the cease and desist is working well, here aga I reiterate what I told the Representative from the District of Colu bia yesterday. The gentleman used FTC as one of his examples. T Federal Trade Commission does have cease-and-desist authority, b at this very moment it is petitioning Congress to give it authority to into the Federal district court to seek enforcement in the same man that the Erlenborn substitute would provide here. It is obvious th the Federal Trade Commission, exercising cease-and-desist authori has come to the conclusion that it would be better off going into t district court.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan h again expired.

(On request of Mr. Boggs, and by unanimous consent, Mr. Ger R. Ford was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, I am well aware of the fact that the g tleman from Illinois would want to keep the record entirely accura To the best of my knowledge, the only administrative agency in t Federal Government where there is a separation as the gentlem pointed out happens to be the NLRB. In the other cases, it is t hearing examiner, selected as I outlined in my main remarks, whi prevails. Is that not correct?

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I would point out that all oth agencies, with the exception of NLRB, that exercise cease and des are regulatory agencies. There is a great deal of difference betwe those that are regulating industries with cease-and-desist orders a those that are resolving disputes between contesting parties.

hen there is this resolution of disputes between contesting parties, s been the judgment of the Congress to separate the function of ecuting from the function of making the judgment.
e committee bill does not separate these. It would allow the Comon to investigate, prosecute, judge, and fashion the remedy.
my opinion, we will be much better off if we separate in the tradil fashion the job of prosecuting from that of judgment.
r. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one further vation?
r. GERALD R. FORD. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.
r. BOGGS. I thank the gentleman for yielding. the Coast Guard, Social Security, and several other agencies the e procedure is by a hearing examiner, with a right of appeal to the of appeals, and that is what is spelled out in this bill.
. GERALD R. FORD. Let me make one observation on the point at here.
this kind of situation discretion is very, very important. I happen ieve the system of justice in the courts is a better forum for that, r than leaving it in the hands of an agency which has the right restigate, to prosecute, to make a decision and then to enforce it. rongly prefer the use of the courts for enforcement, rather than gency itself.
. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number rds.
. Chairman, we are not discussing the Philadelphia plan or any s in employment. I understand the gentleman from Pennsyl-
, the subcommittee chairman (Mr. Dent) will, if he gets the tunity, offer some amendments to the committee bill that have to th employment quotas and the Office of Federal Contract Com-ce. If he has that opportunity, then we can debate those amends and vote on them, as we see fit.
t these amendments are not pending before us now. What we are g about is the Erlenborn substitute. And if the Erlenborn sub-e is agreed to, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent) ot even have the opportunity to offer his amendments.
at then is the difference between the Erlenborn substitute and mmittee bill? The committee bill provides a new method of en-ment for equal employment cases. It lets the Commission go , after appropriate hearings and deliberation, and issue a cease-esist order.
Erlenborn substitute does not give the aggrieved party any-he does not already possess under existing law. The gentleman Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) says his substitute will put the case to But, that is where it goes now. That is the existing law. The man from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) is not giving that aggrieved any right he does not already possess.
only thing in the Erlenborn substitute that is of any advantage soever to the aggrieved party is that under the Erlenborn substihe Commission may, in its discretion, if it decides it wants to, he case to court for the aggrieved party.
. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
O'HARA. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. I appreciate the clarification of the tleman from Michigan, because in fact the Erlenborn substitute grant an enforcement power the Commission now lacks.

Let me take it one step further, to cease and desist. The gentle has just used the words, "may, in its discretion, if it decides" do s thing. The same is true either of the Erlenborn substitute or Hawkins bill.

Mr. O'HARA. The point of the matter is that under the Erlen substitute the Commission perhaps will take it to court, and that be some slight advantage to the aggrieved party over taking it to himself. Though he is now guaranteed attorney's fees and cos he wins it might be nicer to have the Commission take the ca court for him.

But, he gives up something to get that advantage. He now can g court 30 days after he has filed his charge or 30 days after the C mission has completed some action.

He would be required to wait 6 months before he could go to cou his own under the Erlenborn substitute.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. DENT. He gives up something that is good. The people grieved will have more freedom as a result of it, because only Attorney General can institute a case in the court of appeals; not EEOC.

Mr. O'HARA. I thank the gentleman.

I really think there is serious question as to whether or not aggrieved party is better off under the Erlenborn substitute tha is right now under existing law. It can be argued with a good deg force that he would be better off with nothing than with the Erlen substitute.

Mr. HAWKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAWKINS. Is it not also true under the Erlenborn substitute individual will also give up the right to sue under the 1866 act, Equal Pay Act, and possibly under half a dozen other civil ri acts?

Mr. O'HARA. That is absolutely correct. The Erlenborn substi would not only take away his right to go promptly to court on his behalf, it would deprive him of his right to a remedy under o statutes. There are remedies under the NLRB Act and under som the old civil rights statutes that he would sacrifice under the Erlen substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. O'Hara was allowed to proceed
2 additional minutes.)

Mr. O'HARA. If Mr. Chairman, we are dissatisfied, as I am, with provisions of current law as to enforcement of the equal employm opportunities law then we ought to do something about it, and way to do something about it is equip the Commission with ce and desist powers as proposed in the committee bill. If we do not w to do that, then let us not do anything at all. Let us not amend an adequate system of job protection to make it more inadequate as Erlenborn substitute proposes.

hope, Mr. Chairman, that the Erlenborn substitute will be defeated that the committee bill will be agreed to.

r. REID of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the nborn substitute.

r. Chairman, first I would like to point out that the committee is bipartisan in character. It is not a Democratic bill; it is not a ublican bill, but it is a bipartisan bill.

econd, I think it should be pointed out that a significant number Members on my side of the aisle, in my judgment, will support the mittee bill. Indeed, at least one Member and perhaps two Members ne leadership of the Republican Party in the House will support committee bill.

ext I would like to say as simply as I can that there are merits to approach of administrative agency proceedings enforceable with -and-desist orders.

lo not think that during the debate today there has been total ty focused upon the real problem.

ne real problem is not whether you get enforcement in the courts hether you get enforcement through the Commission per se.

ne real point is that if the Equal Employment Opportunity Commion is given cease-and-desist powers the vast majority of cases will r need go to a hearing in the first place, let alone to any kind of proceeding. I can speak from some experience in New York re I served as the Chairman of the New York State Commission nst Discrimination, now the division of human rights.

ne figures in New York's experience clearly emphasize my point. een 1945 and 1967, 16,129 complaints were received by the New commission; 98 percent of them—all but 326—were settled before were ordered for hearing and more than two-thirds of those red for hearing were settled before the hearing was completed.

at means that in New York in 22 years only 110 cases out of 16,000 d further action, and that is largely because the State commispossessed cease-and-desist powers.

. Chairman, the whole concept—and frankly, this should be reczed—of this particular legislation in New York was that of Tom y and Senator Irving Ives, and the concept was that the Comon could deal with complex, sensitive questions, backed up by aw in a way that could not be done in formal court proceedings. erefore, the Commission approach is much more sensitive, more able, and obviously much faster.

ow, Mr. Chairman, what are the dangers of the court proceedings? danger, first of all, is that we would load onto the courts of the ed States an additional 20,000 cases. Does any Member seriously that by adding 20,000 additional cases to the court calendars we oing to expedite matters?

t me state that through the commission procedures cases are dealt much more expeditiously. Let me repeat that, much more exiously; whereas, in court proceedings it can take months or even s.

r example, a case—Weeks against Southern Bell which was a sex imination case—has been in the courts for 5 years and it was just d in April. I have seen through the Commission procedures cases conciliated in a matter of days. It was relatively rare that it came a matter of months. But, believe me, if you go to the court pr dure, you go to a much more difficult procedure, both in time flexibility.

Finally, let me say this, that the Commission procedure works would not be the law of the land in 32 States if it did not work. I h yet to see anyone say that the Commission procedures as followed the several States does not work and work well.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. Reid of New York was allowed to p ceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REID of New York. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from Illin

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding. Let me just a question or two of the gentleman.

First of all, if the Commission procedure is working in the Sta why are so many of the cases that are referred to these local and St Commissions unresolved and referred to the EEOC?

Mr. REID of New York. In response to the question of the gent man from Illinois, first of all, one-third of the States do not ha commissions with cease-and-desist powers. I think the point is th Where you have a commission with such authority such as the St of New York does it has worked extremely well with no need to
to the Commission.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield furth
I would point out the fact that the State of Illinois has a fair emplo ment practices commission which has cease-and-desist authority and it is among one of the top 10 States in the number of cases that th go to the EEOC even after referral. Does this mean that we will clogging the Federal courts with 20,000 more cases?

Is the gentleman aware that in the 6 years of its existence o some 50,000 cases have been filed before the EEOC? Is the gentlem aware that this is not a self-enforcing order? That if enforcement the order under the committee bill is to be obtained it must go to t courts and if this follows the practice of the NLRB, over 50 perc of all the orders issued by the NLRB wind up in the enforcem proceedings in the circuit courts of appeal, where you have only courts, rather than the district court level, where there are 93 cou

As a matter of fact, my recollection is that in the most recent ye 66 percent of the NLRB's cease and-desist orders have wound up the courts for enforcement proceedings. You are not avoiding t courts by using the cease and desist approach.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York h again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. Reid of New York was allowed proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. REID of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for the ad tional 2 minutes so that I might reply to the comments of my league, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn).

First, the gentleman from Illinois raised a question of 20,000 cas and the fact that this might overload and jeopardize the court cal days. That is the figure that has been provided me by the EEOC as their estimate of the pending cases that are unresolved due to the f they do not now have cease-and-desist powers. I think as a reason-estimate there are something like 16,000 to 17,000 cases, as the tleman knows, that are still pending with the Commission, and e not yet been resolved. In fact, they were able to conciliate fewer n half because the Commission does not have cease and desist power. s to the NLRB, it is my understanding that in fiscal year 1970 ething like 72 percent of the cases have been settled without need a formal hearing. In my experience, certainly in New York, if the mission works effectively, if the individuals know that the Com-sion has the power of the law in cease and desist, then you can iliate.

he whole thrust of what I am trying to say is not that the Com-sion procedure works alone, but that it works a great deal better.
y? Because you do not have to go into court in the first place, bee the individual knows that there is that power, and is willing t down and conciliate, and the matter gets resolved, and resolved nptly.
nally, let me say that I think it is terribly important that the ublican Party that was born in the fight to make men free, fight y for that procedure which will most clearly and effectively deal millions of people who still are denied equal employment op-unities, and who need Federal protection with cease and desist.
t is our heritage as a party.
he CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has n expired.
r. PUCINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite numof words.
r. Chairman, I take this time to establish some legislative intent he committee bill, and on the Erlenborn substitute.
ction 706 of the Hawkins bill says that:

e Commission is empowered, as hereinafter provided to prevent any person engaging in any unlawful employment practice as set forth in section 703 4 of this title.

ction 703 provides:

shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to minate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, cons, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, on, sex, or national origin uch has been said about race, color, religion, and sex, but the quesof national origin has very seldom been discussed.

would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT), whether I am correct derstanding that it is the intent of this committee and this Cons that by national origin we mean any person's national origin, and it is not limited to any particular ethnic group, such as a Spanish ame, or American oriental or American Indian. Discrimination se of national origin applies to any American who feels that as been discriminated against because of his national origin, rdless what that national origin may be. Am I correct in that rstanding?
r. DENT. According to the law as it is now written, I would say "national origin" would be the national origin of the individual rdless of what that national origin is.

Mr. PUCINSKI. The reason I ask this question is to be absolutely c tain about this. The Equal Employment Opportunities Commiss has tons of directives and guidelines and material and informat and inquiries and questions and answers dealing with the problems discrimination because of race, color, religion, or sex. But when y ask the Commission for guidelines on that aspect of discriminat dealing with national origin, these guidelines are very scarce.

I was wondering if the Chairman could answer this question. If t are going to give the Commission broad powers in this bill to prev discrimination because of national origin—how can we motivate t Commission to show more sensitivity to those Americans who are d criminated against in job opportunities and promotion advancemen because of national origin?

Mr. DENT. I do not know anything about the Commission's attitu on that matter.

I would say if they administer the laws according to the congr sional intent, you would have no problem at all with the guidelines that because it is the most simple of all answers so far as I am co cerned. National origin only means just that—it means national ori or country of origin.

Mr. PUCINSKI. I would ask the gentleman one more question.

Am I correct in my understanding that it is the intent of this Ho and this Congress that discrimination because of national origin sh be given the same priorities as any other form of discrimination?

Mr. DENT. That is already a part of the law.

Mr. PUCINSKI. I just want to establish this for the purpose of t record.

Mr. DENT. I have never been informed that they do not give eq treatment in cases pertaining to national origin and I would be a lit reticent about any condemnation of the Commission because of th question. I do not know.

Mr. PUCINSKI. I hope that my question does not indicate any co demnation of the Commission. I think the Commission is doing a go job. But I am concerned about the discrimination that exists in t country against various ethnic groups and members of various eth groups such as Italian Americans, Polish Americans, the Jews, G mans, Slavic people, and others, who have been discriminated agai because of their national origin. Guidelines dealing with this form discrimination have not been dealt with on the same priority basis the others are.

I have said on a number of occasions there are indications th priority is given to these other cases involving discrimination beca of race, religion, or sex, and all I want to establish is—that it is t intent of Congress that discrimination because of national origin sh get the same treatment and the same consideration and the same equ ity as to priorities as any other discrimination case.

Mr. DENT. I would read from the report of the committee on page this language:

> It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employment agency to > or refuse to refer for employment, or otherwise to discriminate against, any > dividual because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, or to class > or refer for employment any individual on the basis of his race, color, religi > sex, or national origin.

Each of the requirements are exactly on the same status and on the ne level and the same priority, in my opinion.
Mr. Pucinski. Then it is the opinion of the distinguished gentleman t national origin means any ethnic background and is not limited ny specific background, and this would apply to the Equal Em-yment Opportunity Commission whether the committee bill or the stitute prevails?
Mr. Dent. Yes. But I do not want to get into an argument about t.
Mr. Fauntroy. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.
Mr. Fauntroy asked and was given permission to revise and exl his remarks.)
Mr. Fauntroy. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1746 and pposition to the substitute measure offered by Mr. Erlenborn. The has long passed when we could argue over the need for the wide ging reforms embodied in H.R. 1746. Mr. Hawkins' well-conceived carefully worked out bill. Others will argue ably in support of imant features of the bill, but I wish to take just a moment to focus r attention on one provision that I regard to be of great urgency.
ion 11 of H.R. 1746 would enact into statutory law the national cies expressed in Presidential Executive orders mandating non-rimination in Federal employment. In addition, and most signifily, the bill would transfer the responsibility for implementing eral non-discrimination requirements in Federal employment from Civil Service Commission to the Equal Employment Opportunity mission.
here are few in this Congress who can testify with more experience
I about the pervasive and continuing discrimination by the Fed-Government in the employment of blacks, Spanish-surnamed, and en employees. As a pastor and community leader in the District of mbia during the past 12 years, I have had to respond to thousands omplaints of job discrimination from among the 58,000 Federal loyees in the District who are black. My father was employed at U.S. Patent Office here for 44 years before retiring. He knew the ts of discrimination and we, his children, knew his frustration and air. He trained two generations of white employees who were then ed up and over the shoulder to higher level and higher paying jobs.
n all the evidence I have seen, even today in this supposedly entened time, these practices continue daily with little substantive ge.
Then I came to the Congress 5 months ago, I expected that a sig-ant portion of the casework of my office would be devoted to help-Federal employees resolve job discrimination problems. But I did foresee the incredible deluge of pent-up grievances that have de-ded upon my office in the few short months I have been here. These brought by people with just claims who are deeply angered and trated by the unfair treatment they receive at the hands of the eral Government. My office does its best to help, and in many cases ucceed, but only with a tremendous expenditure of time by my office the time of the employee. We give willingly, knowing that these ple have nowhere else to turn. They have sought help from their cies, and from the Civil Service Commission—all with little ess.

One function of casework in a congressional office is to identify th need for remedial legislation where a pattern of case problems develo I can think of no greater need than this legislation. The Civil Servi Commission, as a result of many factors, is not up to the job. I a convinced that EEOC with its experience in battling job discrimin tion in the private sector and with its sensitivity to the systematic an insitutional roots of job discrimination offers far greater hope to th thousands of employees who every day must suffer the indignity being discriminated against because of their race, religion, sex, or n tional origin.

But I have more than my personal experience to sustain my convi tion about the urgent need for this legislation. The record is clear Statistical evidence demonstrates beyond serious question that minori ties and women find it difficult to secure Federal jobs, particularly higher paying, decisionmaking levels. Blacks, women, Spanish-sur named employees are unduly concentrated in jobs paying the lowe salaries and having the least amount of policymaking responsibilit A report issued by the Civil Service Commission in May 1970 showe that minorities make up 19.4 percent of the total number of Gover ment employees and 14.4 percent of the general schedule employee Approximately 80 percent of these general schedule employees a locked at grades 1–8. While comprising slightly over 14 percent of th general schedule work force, minorities account for 27.3 percent of th lowest level GS 1–4 positions. The picture grows even more gloom when we look at the record of individual cabinet level departments Only 5.2 percent of Interior's employees are black, 5.8 percent of Agr culture's and 6.2 percent of Transportation's. Even more dramatically only 2.9 percent of NASA's employees are black, and less than 550 o the Federal Aviation Administration's air traffic controllers out of total of 20,000 are minority.

These pervasive patterns are reflected in the employment practice at the executive level of Federal employees. In grades GS–14 and 1 minority employees account for only 3.3 percent of employees, and grades GS 15–18 minorities count for only 1 in 50 of all employee While Spanish-surnamed employees are 2.9 percent of employees, on six-tenths of 1 percent have managed to make it to executive level pos tions. Similar patterns also pertain to women employees.

In individual agencies, the presence of blacks in executive level pos tions earning more than $15,000 and presumably having some decisio making authority, grows even more infrequent. In the Department o Interior, less than 1 percent of the blacks in the agency earn more tha $15,000. In Treasury, Defense, Agriculture, and Transportation, percent or less of all black employees make more than $15,000. Mos remarkably of all, in the Justice Department, which at one time ha the major responsibility for securing equal rights for all American only 1.4 percent of black employees reached a salary range of $15,00 or more.

The difficulty of minorities and women in securing Federal employ ment, their high concentration in low level jobs, their virtual absenc from executive level positions, can only be attributed to systemat and institutional failures, failures that the Civil Service Commissio has proved unable to root out effectively.

hese patterns are not accidental; they are the direct result of the ure of the Civil Service Commission to come to grips with the deep s of discrimination pervading Federal employment practices. The mission's failure springs from several sources. The Commission the ultimate responsibility for establishing Federal personnel poli-At the same time, Executive Order 11748 places primary respon-ity for insuring equal employment opportunity in the hands of Civil Service Commission. It seems anomalous to have the Com-sion both establish policies for rooting out discrimination and at same time have the basic responsibility for measuring the effective-of those policies against the demands of the law. H.R. 1746 will edy this inequity and provide for objective review of Federal rimination policies.

eyond the Civil Service Commission's conflict of interest in en-ing nondiscrimination standards, the Commission has failed to rvisors with malicious intent rather than focusing on personnel ish-surnamed, and women employees.

many of us who have closely followed the work of the Commis-in the area of equal employment programs, it has seemed that it is more concerned with fashioning a tidy personnel system in effecting equal job justice for Federal employees. Present Civil ice standards continue to overemphasize paper qualifications and results, even when an employee in his work experience of perance has demonstrated a capacity for a better job or advancement. hermore, the tests used by the Commission are not directed in significant way to the specific job requirements. As the Labor and cation Committee pointed out in its report on H.R. 1746:

> inevitable consequence of this * * * is that classes of persons who are > rally or educationally disadvantaged are subjected to a heavier burden in > ng employment.

ese policies are wrong, but the Commission has utterly failed to at they are wrong.

e CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from the District of mbia has expired.

On request of Mr. Fauntroy, and by unanimous consent, Mr. Fauntwas allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

r. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, the time for change has arrived, and ge my colleagues to seize the time. The Civil Service Commission demonstrated that it is incapable of providing fair and equal job rtunities for all government employees. A new and more sensitive rtise is required. I believe that EEOC offers far greater hope to thousands of employees who today have no real hope for change.
ge your vote against the Erlenborn substitute and in favor of H.R.
The Erlenborn substitute would leave equal employment oppory programs for Federal employees in the hands of the Civil Serv-Commission. The status quo would be continued. I maintain that ransfer is desperately needed, and I urge your support for it.

nally, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask of those who oppose the
-and-desist powers for the Equal Employment Opportunity

Commission this question: What is more precious about the right of investors to be protected by cease-and-desist powers given the Securities and Exchange Commission than the right of blacks, Spanish surnamed, women, and other oppressed minorities people, to be protected by the cease-and-desist powers with which H.R. 1746 would provide the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission? If the Members of this distinguished body will answer that question honestly, they will vote against the Erlenborn substitute and for the bill which is before us, H.R. 1746.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield for a request to set a limitation on time?

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, will it come out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. It will come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. ECKHARDT. But it will not limit my time?

The CHAIRMAN. It will come out of the gentleman's time, but will not limit the gentleman's time.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to set a time limit on this amendment and all amendments thereto, that debate end in 35 minutes from now, except for the 5 minutes for the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the time to end when?

Mr. DENT. Thirty-five minutes from now, except for the time of the gentleman from Texas, which would make it a total of 40 minutes from now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I would object to the reservation. I would have no objection to the time limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the gentleman from Texas had previously been recognized by the Chair. Therefore, the limitation of time would not apply to his time.

Mr. HALL. As a parliamentary inquiry, did not the request for time limitation, which came out of the gentleman's time, retain the last 5 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. No; it did not.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, there is one thing which, it seems to me, has not been recognized with respect to the effect of the Erlenborn amendment as compared with the original committee bill, and that is the real nature of the cases that come before the Commission, or, on the other hand, under the Erlenborn bill, before the court. These are not the simple kinds of cases in which John Smith seeks employment with Joe Bloke, who is the proprietor of a firm, and Joe Bloke says, "No, John, you are a Negro, and I shall not employ you." A case like that, of course, could easily be tried in the Federal court.

However, the kind of case that arises is one similar to this. Both the union and the employer may be acting today in good faith and both may want their problems with respect to racial discrimination solved, but the problem is enmeshed in a long history of contract relations.

ere is, for instance, a labor pool of employees which is composed acks, and historically blacks have been hired into the pool. His- ally whites have progressed along the lines of promotion within arious departments within the plant. To simply say that blacks y have the same rights as whites to exercise their contract se- ty is meaningless, because their seniority is in the pool. What o be done is a discreet examination of the contract relationship een the union and the employer to establish how the effects of discrimination may practically be eradicated. This is as difficult st unfair labor practices that are before the Board today. It may ecessary to establish a system by which seniority in the pool is d into the lines of promotion in the departments.

is is difficult. This is similar to a situation in a merger between ompanies in which two different lines of seniority must be recon- Or we may have a situation such as exists, say, in a telephone any where most of the noncraft employees have been black, and have been no admission tests for those employees to enter into nploy of the telephone company.

ey have worked there for 25 years. They seek at this time to be oted to craft jobs. Craft jobs have always required a test upon ssion at the time of original employment, so a test is imposed blacks who seek to move from one level to another in the tele- e company.

e question then arises, is the test prior to promotion discrimina- since it applies, as far as existing employees are concerned only acks, and those blacks have been just as truly employees of the any for the many years they have been there as the whites have ?

ese questions do not just deal with John Smith asking for em- nent, and he is black, and he is refused. They deal frequently with reds of persons in a single case. That is why we need a Commis- s administrative determination first. It is perfectly reasonable to re it.

a matter of fact, had we imposed upon the courts the complex ems which exist in labor relations- which are no more complex these—we should never have come to the point we are today in g these difficult questions.

e matter here is simply a question of whether we are going to p machinery adequate to solve the problem or whether we are oing to set up that machinery.

e Supreme Court in the steelworker trilogy has said, with re- to many labor problems that they are a matter of the law of the . and this matter of equal employment opportunity fits in that f the plant and is equally complex. The trilogy has said this is e kind of thing the court will decide, that the court will permit atter in that instance to be decided by arbitration so that persons an expertise in this field can solve the difficult questions.

e same kinds of problems are involved here, and the committee rovides the only appropriate machinery for solving them: a ission-type proceeding in which sufficient time and expertise can plied to these very complex problems.

Chairman. Members standing at the time the limitation of de rder was entered will be recognized for 2 minutes each.

The Chair now recognizes the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. Abzug).

(Mrs. Abzug asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. ABZUG. Mr. Chairman, I support H.R. 1746, the Hawkins-Reid bill. The purpose of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the establishment of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission was to end employment discrimination. As a Congresswoman who represents a district in New York which has in it substantial minority groups, I am particularly involved in this issue. I happen to have been a lawyer for many years in the labor law field. I grew up in the NLRB. I can tell you gentlemen who have argued for the Erlenborn amendment, which I oppose, that the reason the cases between labor and management have been able to be resolved is because they have been heard in the same kind of forum in which we are now seeking for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The fact is that we have to be sensitive to our commitment; we have to have a partiality in our commission which understands that it has to fulfill the needs of the blacks and the minorities and the women in this country for equal employment.

I am determined to see that blacks, Puerto Ricans, Chinese, Italians, Jews, Ukrainians, and other minority groups no longer suffer discrimination in employment. Many suffer both because they belong to a minority group and because they are women. They are victims of double discrimination.

The sad fact is that despite the efforts of The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and despite the Civil Rights Act of 1964 women and minorities can still be characterized and minorities can still be characterized as castoffs of the American economy. Both groups suffer consistently from employment discrimination which is blatant, pervasive, and in flagrant violation of Federal law.

One major reason that this discrimination persists is that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, charged with ending employment discrimination in accordance with the provision of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, has been a watchdog without teeth.

The issue confronting the Congress is how we can eliminate this discrimination in employment, and how we can fulfill our commitment to the people under the Civil Rights Act?

Every one of us bears a responsibility, once and for all, to eliminate the cruelty which denies the right to opportunity because of race, sex, national origin to millions of Americans. Let me give you some facts about the rising demand to eliminate discrimination in employment because of sex.

Women now comprise 40 percent of the work force. One out of five women in the work force in 1970 was single and therefore entirely self supporting. One out of three supports children; and one out of five are widowed, divorced, or separated from their husbands. Clearly, these women do not work to "fill up their time" or make "pin money." They work to buy food and clothing and shelter for themselves and their families.

Employers continue to discriminate against female workers in recruitment, hiring, placement, and promotion. Women who pass these iers often confront discrimination in the form of lower wages, f segregation of women into the lowest paying jobs. The United trical Workers Union has estimated that American industry saves illion a year by paying women lower wages than men for essen- the same work.

1969 the average American woman who worked full time earned $60 for every $100 earned by the average American workingman lack women made 20 percent less than that.

omen who have completed college and at least 1 year of graduate ol receive only 67 percent of the salary received by men with alent training—a woman with a college degree earned about uch as a man with an eighth-grade education averaged in 1968. t women who are less educated and highly skilled suffer most— 66, women salesworkers received 41 percent of the salary received en in the same occupation.

e nonwhite woman worker who labors under the double dis- nation of race and sex faces the severest discrimination. In 1969 women earned a median income of $5,182 compared with $8,668 white and nonwhite men. Non-white women, however, who are heavily concentrated in low-wage, low-skill jobs, earned $4,126 47 percent of the income of the average male worker, white or .

e problems of Spanish-surnamed Americans, a racial minority, o less serious. Although they are the second largest minority in the United States, the Spanish-surnamed population is often ted or ignored, even in view of the massive economic and social tice to which they are subject, and cases involving discrimination st Orientals have been practically invisible under Title VII.

e unhappy history of continued employment discrimination st women and minorities, brings us to the question of how we mprove the act, to which we, as Americans, are committed. The kins bill provides such improvement—the Erlenborn bill does

e double discrimination suffered by minority group women can- e eliminated until we begin to deal boldly with their problems as n, as well as their problems as members of a minority.

e important elements in both bills are those dealing with enforce- powers for the EEOC and the scope of coverage of Title VII.

e Hawkins bill gives the EEOC cease-and-desist powers in addi- to the right to issue affirmative orders for back pay and rein- ment. This power is crucial; an administrative order can be ned within several months, while the median time for resolving e in the U.S. district court is 19 months. Also, the cease-and- power is a power which is given to such regulatory agencies as LRB, the SEC, the FCC, and 34 State fair employment prac- commissions.

contrast, the Erlenborn bill would give the EEOC only the time- ming remedy of court enforcement. It seems to be illogical and ary to the intention of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 for the rney General or the district court to assume the function of de- g whether there has been discrimination when the EEOC has ie expertise, by virtue of its experience, in investigating and con- ng cases concerned with employment discrimination.

I want to discuss the importance of expanding the scope of the co erage presently afforded under Title VII. A major reason why EE has not been able to be more effective in eliminating employment d crimination is that large numbers of workers have not been cove
The Hawkins bill would extend coverage to employers and un with eight or more employees or members, whereas now those w fewer than 25 employees or members are exempt from coverage. T Hawkins bill would also extend coverage to teachers by eliminating t "educational institution" exemption under Title VII. This may w be the most important provision in terms of its effect on wom Consider the number of women who would gain protection by T VII coverage under this provision: Two out of five college gradua major in education, 86 percent of elementary school teachers women, and 47 percent of secondary school teachers are women.
In addition, and this is an important addition, the Hawkins would extend coverage to State and local government employees, a would extend the Civil Service Commission powers of enforcem regarding employment discrimination to EEOC. Data from the C Service Commission itself indicates how badly women need this. C data in 1969 showed that 80.4 percent of all women in the Fede Government held jobs in grade levels 1 through 6. For Spanish-s named Americans, the percentage in levels 1 through 6 was 6 Clearly, the Civil Service Commission is either unwilling, or has be unable, to make equal employment opportunity a reality for either these groups.
The Erlenborn bill extends no coverage to these groups: employ of small businesses, teachers, and Government workers. Surely th workers are entitled to the same protection afforded all other work under the coverage of Title VII, and the Hawkins bill does no m than give them that to which they are justly entitled.
Although enforcement powers and scope of coverage are the t most important issues before the Congress, several other highly s nificant matters remain.
The Erlenborn bill would eliminate the right of an employee to br a class action on the behalf of all other employees similarly situat a right which now exists under Title VII. My fellow colleagues, sex a race discrimination are by the very nature class discriminations. N a member of a discriminated against class, or several members, c bring suit on behalf of their entire class, and seek an award of ba pay, reinstatement, or injunctive relief. The structure and pattern employment discrimination will remain untouched unless large nu bers of workers are affected. An award in favor of one complain will do little to discourage an employer bent on discriminating aga a class of employees, but an award or even the possibility of award on behalf of an entire class can effectively discourage t kind of unlawful discrimination.
The Erlenborn bill provides that charges filed under Title VII co stitute an exclusive remedy. That means that working people wo be denied the remedies Congress has already provided, such as t Equal Pay Act of 1963 and the Civil Rights Act of 1966 and the N tional Labor Relations Act.
It is a plain fact that as women continue to recognize that they a receiving less pay for the same work that men are doing, more emplo ment discrimination cases are going to be filed.

milarly, as minorities realize that they cannot continue to live on kind of pay they are receiving, there will be more cases. The Mem- of this Congress must recognize, for once and for all, that a per- ent obligation of a Representative of Congress is to provide the rtunity to all Americans, equally, to earn a living.

ie very heart of a nation and the success of a democracy depends n giving freedom and equality to all its citizens, and there can be reedom or equality when people are discriminated against in the fundamental life—the way in which they earn their living.

would disagree with the amendments to the bill which the com- e may recommend to limit back pay to no more than 2 years, enting setting quotas, and require informing the employer within ys when charges are filed with the Commission. I am also opposed e transfer of the functions of the Office of Federal Compliance— C—from the Labor Department to the EEOC.

owever, I can accept these amendments to get an overall bill which real enforcement powers to the EEOC. I would suggest that those Members who, though they have spoken for the Erlenborn dment, consider it important that EEOC's coverage be extended ose who are most discriminated against should be prepared to go way and support the Hawkins-Reid bill with the Dent amend- s.

ose who have been traditionally discriminated against women minorities—are entitled to the protection of the law and law en- ment in a country which boasts of equal opportunity for all. ly the concept of "equal pay for equal work" is an idea whose has come.

e CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois, Anderson.

[r. Anderson of Illinois asked and was given permission to re- nd extend his remarks.)

. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, anyone familiar with the ment of civil rights legislation over the last decade knows the eman from Ohio (Mr. McCulloch), the ranking Republican mem- f the House Committee on the Judiciary, has played an absolutely pensable role in the passage of every important bill of that kind. ysical limitations have prevented him from being here this after- . He personally contacted me this morning and requested that I ar on the floor this afternoon before the committee and inform that he had prepared a statement which he wished me to read. ould like at this time to read his statement.

. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, the central issue confronting the bers of this body in choosing between H.R. 1746 and H.R. 9247 is her the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission should be ed cease-and-desist powers. There is no question in my mind that uld.

e difference between the two approaches is that H.R. 1746 would the Commission to issue what is, in effect, a preliminary injunc- whereas H.R. 9247 would allow only a Federal court to issue such junction. Both approaches are subject to later judicial scrutiny. he critical distinction is that H.R. 1746 places the burden of delay e wrongdoers whereas H.R. 9247 places the burden of delay on ictim. If the Commission with its unsurpassed expertise in this field believes that discrimination exists, why should relief be withhel for months or more until the Federal courts have time to take up th case?

The burden of delay must fall on one side or the other. I prefer t place my trust in the Commission's judgment. H.R. 1746 does tha H.R. 9247, in effect, presumes that the Commission is wrong unt the Federal court overrules that presumption. Thus I cannot suppo H.R. 9247.

When the Commission finds wrongdoing, why should we presum that the wrongdoer is right? Why should we presume that the Co mission is wrong?

Suffice it to say this distinguished member of the House Committe on the Judiciary shares with me the concern that I expressed on yeste day that if we are really seeking the most effective and the most ex peditious means of enforcement under Title VII, we should choose th administrative process or run the considerable risk of overburdenin the Federal judiciary of this country. I take my place with pri alongside of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. McCu loch) in support of the committee bill, H.R. 1746.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentuck (Mr. Mazzoli).

(Mr. Mazzoli asked and was given permission to revise and exten his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the substitute.

Earlier today we heard from the distinguished gentleman fro New York (Mr. Reid), who indicated that the cease-and-desist powe generally settle more cases—roughly 98 percent of the cases. I woul like to suggest that the committee read on page 11 of the committe report where it is stated:

Past experience with administrative hearings and court enforcement indicat that cease-and-desist would be more effective. Experience has shown that one the main advantages of granting enforcement power to a regulatory agency that the existence of the sanction encourages settlement of complaints befo the enforcement stage is reached.

I might say the existence of this dramatic and drastic and potentiall arbitrary power waiting on the sidelines does tend to settle cases, bu it may not settle them accurately and appropriately.

I further suggest that the committee read on page 11 where it says

Moreover, administrative tribunals are less subject to technical rules go erning such matters as pleadings and motion practice which afford opport nities for dilatory tactics and are less constrained by formal rules of evidenc

I might suggest to the committee that abandonment of formal rul of evidence does not guarantee the equitable disposition of cases. I does not adhere to the noble and time-tested traditions of America, th tradition of the rule of law, the tradition of granting each party hi day in court and the fullest protection of all rules, procedural and ev dentiary on the statute books.

I urge support of the Erlenborn substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iow (Mr. Gross).

(Mr. Gross asked and was given permission to revise and exten his remarks.)

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Erlenborn stitute.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Gross yielded the remainder of his to Mr. Erlenborn).

he CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Michi- (Mrs. Griffiths).

Mrs. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill and nst the Erlenborn substitute.

would like to point out that this bill affects women, 52 percent of population of this country. If there is any group that should not illing to trust their rights to the Federal courts of the country, it men. They have never won. The only case that has ever reached Supreme Court under Title VII, the Supreme Court had the colos- erve to laugh.

there is any group to which I am not willing to trust my rights he Supreme Court of the United States.

r. Chairman, I am for the cease-and-desist powers remaining in the Commission, and on behalf of all women, I think that is correct.

we only win one-third of the cases, that is one-third more than ver won before.

herefore, Mr. Chairman, I urge everyone here to oppose the nborn substitute and vote for the committee bill as it has been en.

he CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wiscon- Mr. Steiger).

Mr. Seiger of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to re- and extend his remarks.)

By unanimous consent, Mr. Gerald R. Ford yielded his time to Mr. ger of Wisconsin.)

r. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I think with what has said recently in the debate we have finally gotten back to the where it is very clear as to what the issue is. The issue is not the rescreen of setting quotas and it is not the smokescreen of prefer- l treatment, but, rather, what kind of enforcement powers should ranted to the EEOC.

he issue is whether or not the administrative approach is preferable hether the referral of these matters to the courts is preferable.

r. Chairman, I think the Chairman of the EEOC who has ex- ed his views on this matter are worth recalling to the members of committee. In his testimony he said this:

must keep in mind that the great growth of administrative agencies as icating bodies took place in the 1930's, because of the established hostility ack of understanding of the problems of that time by the courts of that lay, in the area of civil rights at least, the opposite has been true. Whereas nistrative and other non-judicial approaches have evidenced timidity and of resourcefulness on the part of the administrative agencies, the courts the beginning demonstrated both that they knew the nature of the problem ere willing to take steps necessary to effectively combat employment dis- nation.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that that one statement of the Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission more than anything else clarifies exactly what we are talking about. What we would get through the adoption of the Erlenborn substitute is the ability to insure not only effective enforcement and to insure fair enforcement but prompt enforcement of the voluntary enforcement compliance efforts of the EEOC.

If you stay with the committee bill, not only do you have the continuing problem of administrative relief of cease-and-desist which is less substantive and less effective than the court process, but you also have the three other problems: namely, the transfer of the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission, the transfer of the pattern and practice jurisdiction of the Justice Department and the transfer of the OFCCC. You put them all together with the cease-and-desist authority plus granting jurisdiction over State and local employees and you create problems.

Mr. Chairman, I think the substitute amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) and the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Mazzoli) offers to this House the opportunity to fulfill a commitment to grant the power to EEOC that it needs now in its effort to see that all parties are treated equitably and justly.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that the substitute amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. Biaggi).

(Mr. Biaggi asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, many years ago New York State adopted a law that created a State Commission for Human Rights, and thereafter the city of New York did likewise. It did so initially without a cease-and-desist order.

The enactment of that legislation was virtually meaningless. Later cease and desist was written into the law, then it became a meaningful operation. The statistics were correctly enunciated by the gentleman from New York (Mr. Reid) showing very effectively the process of conciliation and cease and desist works.

The gentleman from Wisconsin said it is a question of administrative remedy versus judicial remedy. I suggest that that is not the case because under the committee bill you have the administrative remedy plus the judicial remedy. When a cease-and-desist order is granted the respondent can then appeal to the courts.

Currently I am representing a young lady, and have been for four years, who is seeking to be a baseball umpire. We went through the State commission for human rights, and won every step of the way. It was appealed on cease and desist. We are now before the State of New York Court of Appeals waiting a determination. That confirms the fact that you have judicial plus administrative remedies.

In addition to that we have a situation existing now where the commission grants money to the human rights commission in the various States in order to employ more people to deal with complaints.

This route is pursued because they know they are inadequate by virtue of the absence of cease and desist orders. By providing more per-

l the complaints or complainants are referred to the State agency they can seek redress and get the advantage of cease and desist.
mbers of the House, this is vital, it is working, and, again I re-that is the salient point—it is working. The substitute offered by ntleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn), I presume—and I have sume, because I know the gentleman—that he intends in good to provide substantial relief. Others have stated this substitute is t but a ploy to deny civil rights machinery to all aggrieved peoarguments of those opposed to giving the EEOC cease-and-de-fact is that cease-and-desist powers are available in some 35 that have fair employment practice acts of one sort or another. ionally, the EEOC through its grant authority has provided to State and local commissions that then use their cease-and-

(Mr. Corman).
. Corman asked and was given permission to revise and extend narks.)
CORMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am firmly convinced that the greatest n this Nation has borne since it was founded is racism, and it is something that was thrust upon us by history. The one encouraging thing we can say is that we have always moved in the direction of destroying it.

From 1808, when we said we will no longer import human beings to sell, we have moved in the direction of fulfilling the promise of those who founded America to all Americans. In 1865, we kept this promise alive with the ratification of the 13th Amendment and black men across this country thought this promise might even become a reality with the passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, the 1965 Voting Rights Act, and the 1968 Open Housing Act. Today, we are voting on a bill that is as important as any we will have this year because the House of Representatives is going to decide whether we as a Nation want to move on down that road of freedom and equal opportunity or whether we want to back out on a promise we made nearly 200 years ago.

All the talk about the Erlenborn substitute being the greater remedy to insuring equal opportunity is hogwash. Just look at the people inside and outside this House who support or oppose it—and we all know what the issue is.

I was sorely disappointed when the minority leader was not on the side of the committee, and on the side of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. McCulloch), because he is so important, and so often he speaks for the administration, as well as for the minority Members of the House. Mr. McCulloch and Mr. Celler have for the past two decades been giants in the struggle for civil rights and both are strongly opposed to the Erlenborn substitute.

I was disappointed when Mr. Ford and the President did not support a continuation of the voting rights bill in the last Congress and by their opposition to integrating suburbs and schools. Throughout his administration, the President has acted repeatedly to frustrate the desires of blacks to vote, to enjoy equal housing opportunities, to avoid the job discrimination which has prevented them from taking their proper places in the American job market. As one of the major spokesmen for the administration, the minority leader has frequently backed the President in perpetuating these injustices.

It was disheartening to learn that the minority leader does not support cease-and-desist power for the Commission because more important than the issue itself or the party advocating it, this enforcement power is a symbol that we in the House of Representatives are still firmly opposed to racism and that we want to end it using the most vigorous mechanism we can.

We tried in 1964 to get cease and-desist power for the Commission when it was first established. We knew it would have to come some day. I am sorry we had to wait so long. Since 1964 we have fought to allow the black man to take his place beside his white brother in our schools, in our neighborhoods and I believe it is long overdue that he take his proper place in the labor market.

I truly regret that the minority leader is not supporting the committee, but I hope the Erlenborn amendment is defeated overwhelmingly because I hope that the voice is loud and clear that we are still dedicated to eliminating racism in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. Reid) for 2 minutes.

Mr. Reid of New York. Mr. Chairman, on the point of how rapidly s proceed, let me just say that litigation on Title VII cases has n held up for years in courts.
or example, the case of Washington against T.G. & Y Stores has n before the Federal District Court for the Western District of isiana on motions to dismiss for 13 months, but the case has not reached trial. Even more outrageous is the fact that charges were inally brought in this case 3 years ago.
econd, let me point out that Chief Justice Burger has opposed slative introduction of large numbers of cases into the Federal cial system without first providing for the reorganization of that em.
n an address before the American Bar Association last year, Chief ice Burger said:

e difficulty lies in our tendency to meet new and legitimate demands with laws which are passed without adequate consideration of the consequences e terms of case load.

ne Commission itself estimates that the new case load could be
)0 additional cases.
would submit that that would not result in expediting the adminis-on of justice, but it could mean a lack of timely and effective enement.
he House passed this bill in 1966. The Senate passed it in 1970. I e today that we make equal employment opportunity a reality now defeat the Erlenborn amendment and then go on to approve the mittee bill which is the kind of legislation that should have really passed 20 years ago and which is legislation that is vitally necesto our country.
e Chairman. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois Erlenborn) for 4 minutes.
Mr. Erlenborn asked and was given permission to revise and extend emarks.)
r. Erlenborn. Mr. Chairman. I am not going to take the time of Committee now to again reiterate what is in my substitute or t is in the committee bill. I think we have had a thorough dis-ion of that during the last 2 days.
e also have had an issue raised, new this week, by the introduction new element by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent) ome three amendments that he proposes to offer if he has an op-unity to offer them to the committee bill. wo of those amendments are amendments that I offered in the sub-mittee and in the full committee. They were rejected by the com-ee. I would still support them if it comes to that, but I hope it not. I hope my substitute amendment is adopted. ne third point is another issue that has been somewhat debated that is the question of removing from the OFCC jurisdiction the t to set effective goals, an affirmative action plan.
ne circuit court of appeals has affirmed the Philadelphia plan.
here is an obligation requiring bidders on Federal or federally sted construction projects to submit an affirmative action plan for employment of minorities excluded from referral systems in six es.

The courts upheld this, and held specifically that it does not violate Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

But what is the thrust of the gentleman's amendment? It can be one of two things. It either means nothing or it destroys the affirmative action authority that the OFCC now exercises.

I submit from the explanation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent) that he believes it does the latter—it destroys this authority.

How the proponents of civil rights can support this sort of amendment and can take the floor and say that this is a fine thing—I do not understand, because the one great opportunity for greater minority employment in the construction crafts has been through the OFCC affirmative action plan.

Yesterday I referred to an editorial published in the Wall Street Journal and read a part of it. A good deal of the debate we have had concerning the effectiveness of enforcement proceedings, cease and desist vis-a-vis court enforcement, has been as to the speed and effectiveness of the opposing enforcement procedures. This editorial in the Wall Street Journal addresses itself to that point:

But speed is only one measure of effectiveness; final results are a better gauge. But by that measure, too, the scholarly critics doubt that complex problems of bias, deeply rooted in many aspects of the society, lend themselves to resolution through cease and desist orders. For one thing such orders issued by the labor board have the relatively limited function of getting parties to negotiate. At the EEOC, they would presumably have to carry a greater problem-solving load. Furthermore, some experts worry that a substantially strengthened EEOC would invite subversion from special-interest groups.

Concluding, the editorial states—

No doubt, the new powers Congress confers upon the EEOC will profoundly affect the future course of the civil-rights movement. While most civil-rights advocates prefer cease and desist, it's by no means clear that this approach would ultimately prove more effective than merely authorizing the EEOC to ask courts to enforce its anti-discrimination rulings. As Mr. Blumrosen writes: "One court decision is worth 10 written conciliation agreements and one hundred annual reports of administrative agencies."

Mr. Chairman, I urge support of the Erlenborn-Mazzoli substitute, which would give the Commission the right to go into court, resulting in fairness to both parties, and expeditious, judicial and fair relief. I hope the Erlenborn-Mazzoli substitute is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. Hawkins).

(Mr. Hawkins asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I was quite upset when the minority leader some time earlier mentioned the Philadelphia plan as the main support apparently of blacks and others to get jobs in America.

In the first year of the operation of this plan do you know how many blacks got jobs? Less than 100. Do you know how many women have gotten jobs in the history of the Philadelphia plan? Not a single one. Yet the gentleman has the nerve to put that forth as a civil rights record to go to the American people.

The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn) says that we are attempting to destroy affirmative action plans by transferring the authority of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance. The amendment ne gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent) does not do this, he knows that it does not do this. Furthermore, he knows that to sfer it to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act would, for the first , bring labor under the operation of the law, which is now exempt r the OFCC. It cannot be reached. They are trying to reach by having the companies do it. But labor itself is not touched. If does not strengthen the law, I do not know what does. These tatements have gone on for 2 days.

hat the Erlenborn substitute does is to nullify the Civil Rights of 1866, which later became the 14th Amendment, as far as em- nent discrimination is concerned. It nullifies the Equal Pay Act. ipes out the Office of Federal Contract Compliance where Title now applies. And it wipes out other Civil Rights Acts as well.

e implication is given that somehow this bill is supported by some rights individuals. What ones was never brought out in the com- e. It is a phantom Civil Rights Act. The origin is clouded in ery. The Chairman of the EEOC would not take credit for it, the rney General's Office would not take credit for it, and apparently lministration has not yet taken credit for it. Its support is under- nd. They are operating as guerrillas to try to line up support in House.

e CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has ed.

e Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr.).

. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California Hawkins).

. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, the future of this bill is equally a tom. This bill is going to evaporate if its real mission is accom- ed, which is the defeat of H.R. 1746. This bill was not dragged til it was thought there was a possibility of passage of a strong rights bill. The proponents have not yet indicated how this some way accommodates to the administration position, or how osition of the minority leader in the House squared with the mi- y leader in the other House who is supporting our bill—that explained. There has been no explanation as to why they do not to follow the leadership of the ranking Republican on the Ju- ry Committee, who is supporting our bill.

parently there has not yet been an understanding of Chief Jus- Burger's warning that to pass such legislation will result in at 20,000 to 25,000 more cases in courts which are already over- led.

. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a ques-

. HAWKINS. I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee, the eman from Pennsylvania.

. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if in inion after the experience we have had, and with his sources of ledge and the acquaintances the gentleman has with the many rights groups in the United States, and after hearings on this leg- on all over the country in the last 3 years before our com- e, would the gentleman say that a vote for the Erlenborn amendment would be considered a vote favorable to a good civil rights bill or a bill that has the support of civil rights groups?

Mr. HAWKINS. There is no issue which is clearer. The only person they have ever quoted who is anywhere near to being a civil rights activist or a civil rights spokesman is the Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, and he is an appointee of the administration. Not only that, but also in spite of that, he supports not just this bill, but he wants a self-enforceable cease-and-desist order bill, so he wants to go much beyond the position we maintain. That is the only person they have ever quoted.

They do not have the support of a single civil rights organization or a single women's rights organization on their side. Yet they have the audacity to give the impression that somehow they are doing something with and for minorities. I suppose before making that statement they have not consulted with the minorities.

I think this is one of the most dangerous and far-reaching types of sabotage of a civil rights bill. I think there should be give and take on both sides, but certainly there should be some giving on the other side and not only just on our side. On the asking for minorities and women to continue to be patient while we drag out the implementation of the Civil Rights Act.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the Erlenborn amendment. First of all, I worked for 7 years on a bill to provide equal pay for equal work. On page 4 of the Erlenborn bill, on line 14 it reads:

A charge filed hereunder shall be the exclusive remedy of any person claiming to be aggrieved by an unlawful employment practice of an employer, employment agency, or labor organization.

In a memorandum from Mr. Erlenborn's office, dated June 17, 1971, on pages 1 and 2:

2. Exclusive Remedy. Section 3(b) of the bill adds a provision that charges filed under Title VII shall be exclusive federal remedy for persons claiming to be aggrieved by discriminatory practices of covered respondents. . . . One effect of this section is to supersede employment discrimination proceedings now being filed under the Civil Rights Act of 1866 and the National Labor Relations Act, amongst others.

The Equal Pay for Equal Work Act is one of those "among others."

Mr. Erlenborn stated yesterday, in supporting his substitute:

So a person bringing an action under this cannot shop around for another forum on which to base another law suit, we would make the Equal Employment Opportunity Act the sole Federal remedy for relief from discriminatory employment practices.

From these statements, I cannot but conclude that a woman no longer has the protection of the Equal Pay for Equal Work Act. This is another reason why I believe that the Erlenborn substitute is misnamed. It is not an equal employment bill if it wipes out in one fell swoop the provisions for some justice for the majority of the people in this country and for one third of the labor force: The women, black and white, red and brown, who have historically been doing identical work to that of men and have been paid less. In 1963 this Congress finally passed the equal pay for equal work bill. Is the minority leader, Mr. Erlenborn, and are other Members of this House willing to a bill today which denies equal employment rights in the form qual pay to some 36 million American women?

r. Chairman, let me turn to the argument over the power that ıt be exercised under the cease-and-desist provision. My State of gon has had cease-and-desist powers as have some other 30 States ıe Union. It is not under the cease-and-desist power that unfair tices occur in Portland and in other parts of my State. The in-ties, the injustice comes about because of the almost absolute power h the Office of Federal Contract Compliance exercises. Yesterday ferred to three cases of which I had personal knowledge. One of e was a ship conversion plant in Portland. In Oregon we have a 5 percent black population. This ship conversion plant had on their olls 15 percent minority employees. Long before OFCC was lished this plant had gone out to actively recruit members of the rity races. The Contract Compliance Office in San Francisco said percent quota was not sufficient and that they must hire 15 per-in every job category. They demanded that 15 percent of all ers be members of the minority race; that 15 percent of all of the ricians be of a minority race; that 15 percent of all carpenters be minority race; that 15 percent of the clerical employees be of ıority race.
ie Office of Contract Compliance further threatened to hold this any in noncompliance and ineligible for Federal contracts unless complied with their demands. The management of the plant exed that there were not a sufficient number of qualified welders ıg the minority groups to meet that 15 percent quota. The answer we have a surplus in Chicago, we will bring them to Oregon.
e management of the plant decided that any appeal was hopeınd that it was almost impossible to successfully appeal an order the Contract Compliance Office.
ıder the cease-and-desist orders there is an automatic right to ıl the case. It seems to me that this is a much fairer way than tinuation of the awesome power exercised by the Office of Federal ract Compliance which the Erlenborn substitute would now fer to the EEOC.
summary, Mr. Chairman, I oppose the Erlenborn substitute beit perpetuates the quota system established under the Executive and in conflict with Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. I oppose Erlenborn amendment because in giving special rights to some nies equal rights and job opportunities to others. I oppose the ıborn amendment because it has clearly been misnamed. It is not ual employment bill when it wipes out the Equal Pay for Equal Act which was finally placed on the statute books after years ork by almost every women's group in the country.
. Ashbrook. Mr. Chairman, I supported the Erlenborn sub-e but will vote against this bill. Having followed Title VII very y since its inception and the EEOC since its establishment it is us that the real purpose of granting additional powers for the C is to give it more authority than it deserves or should properly

e EEOC will work for quotas, despite congressional intent, and s blackjack authority to force these on employers. Cease-and-powers, however, discussed in the rhetorical context, will be the method for compliance. Just as bureaucrats now order localities or businesses to "submit plans" they will hold the threat of issuing cease-and-desist orders over the heads of business to bring about compliance.

An editorial from the Indianapolis News on September 7, 1971 states the issue very well. I read it into the Record at this point:

One of the first restrictions a totalitarian government imposes is to forbid freedom of movement, an authorization tactic some top members of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission also want to adopt.

A trio of EEOC attorneys, including an executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union, has recommended to the chairman that entrepreneurs must first prove to EEOC's satisfaction, or face court action, that any proposed relocation of a business is solely for improvement of its economic or competitive position. What the attorneys really intend is to prevent businesses from closing down unprofitable facilities in inner cities—a prohibition which eventually would injure employe and employer. No businessman can tell beforehand what effect relocation is going to have on employment.

The attorneys claim that any contemplated move to a site "that threatens to deprive minority workers of employment opportunities constitutes a prima facie violation of Title VII" of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. In a memorandum to William H. Brown III, chairman of EEOC, the attorneys said: "Section 703(a) states that it is unlawful for an employer 'to deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities . . .'" The catch is—and it blows the entire "legal" argument—the section says much more, to wit:

"Section 703(a). It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—(1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; or

"(2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employes in any way which would deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employe, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin."

What EEOC trio has done is to trim down part two of Section 703 to "provide" its legal authority to restrict freedom of movement. Taken as a whole, Title VII, Section 703(a), parts one and two, says nothing about where a businessman can or cannot operate. It simply requires him to hire, fire and compensate an individual solely on his skills and performance—which, out of economic self-interest, a smart employer would do anyway.

The EEOC attorneys are attempting what Congress clearly has not authorized and therefore has prohibited. Only the President, however, can prevent the EEOC, an executive agency, from severely damaging the free enterprise system.

Mr. Chairman, this agency does not deserve any additional power. I oppose giving it any additional authority.

Mr. BADILLO. Mr. Chairman, we are today considering a measure which will grant the Federal Government much needed enforcement powers to end discriminatory employment practices and to improve and, hopefully, reinforce Federal efforts to prevent bias in employment. Although I intend to fully support the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971—H.R. 1746—I believe the time is long overdue for the Federal Government to put its own house in order in terms of ending its own discriminatory employment practices.

Although the Government must have the authority to bring an end to the bias and prejudice which currently exists in many areas of personnel policies in the private sector, it must also abide by the same principles and achieve the same goals and quotas which are established for private industry and labor. I am especially concerned over very poor record of the Federal Government in the employment Spanish-speaking Americans.

The U.S. Government is the Nation's largest employer with some 1,639 men and women serving in civilian capacities. However, nish-speaking persons represent only 2.85 percent of all Federal loyees—less than half of our proportion of the general population. s interesting to note that two departments which administer social economic welfare programs of special importance to much of the nish-speaking community—HUD and HEW—have a particu- y small percentage of Spanish-speaking employees—1.3 and 1.2 cent, respectively.

n addition to the very low representation of Spanish-speaking ericans in the Federal civil service, it is also most important to ize that those who are fortunate enough to be employed by Uncle are heavily concentrated in the lower grade levels. The U.S. mission on Civil Rights advises me that there are only 17 Spanish- king persons who hold supergrade positions—GS–16 to GS–18 he entire Federal Establishment.

ast November, the President announced a 16-point program de- ed to create greater employment opportunities for the Spanish king in the Federal Government. Although this program has been xistence for some 10 months and has taken some small steps to lement the President's 16 points, it is clear that much remains to one. Two departments, for example—DOD and the U.S. Postal ice—together employ 81.09 percent of all Spanish-speaking per- in the Federal Establishment. The great majority of Spanish- king citizens continue to be concentrated in pay categories below 00 per annum and very few—too few—are in positions of respon- ity or decisionmaking. Consider, for example, the fact that only n Spanish-speaking persons are in the supergrade category in the artment of State and none heads any of our country's foreign ions in any Spanish-speaking nation, even though the Nixon ad- istration has professed an intense interest in our Latin American hbors to the south.

r. Chairman, it is clear that the time is long past to end the hypoc- of equal employment opportunities practiced by the Federal Gov- ment since the first Equal Opportunity Executive order was pro- gated in 1955. It is time for the U.S. Government to follow the ciple of employment of Spanish-speaking Americans commen- te with their percentage of the total population. Tokenism is rly unacceptable to the Spanish-speaking community. An imme- e and concerted effort must be undertaken to fully implement the oints announced by Mr. Nixon last year and to expand them where ssary to achieve some meaningful results. I speak not only of in- sing employment opportunities for Spanish-speaking Americans also in ending certain requirements or features of personnel poli- which discriminate against Spanish-speaking persons. For exam- physical height requirements have often presented unnecessary iers to the employment of Spanish-speaking persons in many ncies. Most of the written examinations are conducted in English, even though the results of a test may not necessarily reflect the ap plicant's ability to perform a particular job.

The failure of the Federal Government to afford full and equa employment opportunities for Spanish-speaking persons transcends Republican or Democrat administrations and the low degree of em ployment has remained at the same basic level for over a decade. The efforts of the U.S. Civil Service Commission to recruit Spanish speaking persons must be significantly accelerated and the continued low representation of Spanish-speaking persons in the Federal servic clearly indicates that considerably stronger efforts must be made While I realize that we are now in the midst of a freeze in Federa employment, this situation will certainly not persist and when the Federal job market again becomes open, expanded opportunities must be made available for Spanish-speaking Americans—not only in term of being hired but also in achieving promotions and in being selected for supergrade and important managerial positions.

In order that our colleagues may have a clearer picture of the cur rent situation, I submit herewith, for inclusion in the Record, two charts on Spanish-speaking employment prepared by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission and the U.S. Civil Service Commission and the President's 16-point program.

Mr. Chairman, Spanish-speaking Americans have been treated as second-class citizens far too long and we demand fair and just treat ment by the Federal Government. Equal employment opportunities has been a hollow, meaningless promise to us and we intend to exer all necessary efforts to achieve full equality with other citizens. We are not making extraordinary demands but simply ask that the Federal employment of Spanish-speaking persons shall be proportionate to our percentage of the total population of the United States and that we be afforded the opportunity to serve at all levels of Government service, including management and supervisory positions. Federal per sonnel policies and practices must serve as models for the private sector and true equal employment will not occur in this country until it exists in the Federal service.

Minority Group Employment in the Federal Government; May 31, 1970. Prepared by U.S. Civil Service Com-
S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C.

SIXTEEN-POINT PROGRAM

The President today announced the initiation by the Civil Service Commissi of a sixteen-point program to assist Spanish-speaking American citizens wh are interested in joining Federal civilian service.

This program is a follow-up to the statement the President made in his July 3 press conference in Los Angeles welcoming interested and qualified Spanis speaking persons who have an interest in Federal employment.

The sixteen steps which Civil Service Commission Chairman Robert Hampton will begin immediately to undertake are as follows:

1. Appoint a full-time official in the Civil Service Commission who will provid advice and assistance on matters relating to Spanish-surnamed population t assure full application of the EEO program in all Federal agencies to this grou

2. Begin an intensified drive to recruit Spanish-surnamed persons, particular for identified public contact positions, in areas of heavy Spanish-speaking popul tion, including the Southwestern states and in Chicago, Detroit, and New Yor and certain other major metropolitan areas.

3. Use specialized recruitment teams, to include Spanish-speaking person for college recruitment, particularly at colleges with heavy Spanish-speakin enrollments.

4. Begin work immediately with OEO, DHEW, HUD, Labor to find ways t enhance opportunities at all levels for Spanish-surnamed Americans in progra dealing with the Spanish-speaking population as well as in other programs and key occupations.

5. Step up recruitment for Cooperative Education Program at colleges wit significant numbers of Spanish-speaking students to permit entry from FSE registers without necessity of written examination.

6. Emphasize to Federal agencies availability of selective placement bilingual basis so Spanish-speaking persons may be reached for appointme to positions dealing with the Spanish-surnamed population.

7. Hold an EEO conference of Federal managers and equal opportunity offici in the Southwest designed to assure equal opportunity for Spanish-speaki persons in employment and upward mobility in Federal agencies.

8. Develop plans for Federal agencies under CSC area office leadership t work with high schools in Spanish-speaking areas to make known job oppo tunities in the Federal Government and to counsel and to encourage students stay in school.

9. Hire for summer employment in Federal agencies school and college teache from schools serving Spanish-speaking students to give them understanding the Federal Government which they can relate to students.

10. Make special effort to inform Spanish-surnamed veterans of availabili of non-competitive appointments for Vietnam Era Veterans including GS- level.

11. Require Federal agencies to review their EEO action plans and minori employment figures and make any necessary revisions to assure the full applic bility of the plans to Spanish-surnamed population.

12. Review with agencies staffing of EEO program to make sure that the is understanding in the program of the special problems of the Spanish-speakin

13. Provide additional training programs on EEO and personnel management for Federal managers in areas of Spanish-speaking population.

14. With the Department of Labor, explore the feasibility of establishing a Intergovernmental Training Facility for upward mobility and skills traini for Federal, State and local careers in the Southwest, probably in San Antonio.

Mr. JAMES V. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R 1746 because, as I see it, the issue is simply one of Congress keeping its word. In the Civil Rights Act of 1964, we promised that job opportu nities would be open to all Americans, without discrimination on ac count of race, religion, gender, or national origin. But we neglected at that time to see to it that there were adequate provisions in the law for ng out this commitment. The evidence adduced at the committee igs makes it plain that unfairness persists in the job market, coming our grievous unemployment problem. We have learned from ience in this country that promises not kept are better not made—law not enforced, because no machinery is provided for its en-ment, arouses a cynical contempt for laws generally. If we want t for the law in these troubled times, the laws must command t by being drafted in such a way that compliance follows.

wise the law is reduced to a scrap of paper.

Chairman, there is nothing unique about H.R. 1746. It fits in our pattern of administrative law. By giving cease-and-desist s to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, we are arming that agency with the type of authority familiar to all who have followed the practices and procedures of the National Relations Board, the Federal Trade Commission, and similar mental entities. The cease-and-desist power has been used effec-by those agencies, and I fail to see why the Equal Employment tunity Commission should be an exception to the general rule.

1746.

Fraser. Mr. Chairman, one of the facts which those of us who ncerned about governmental organization must face, is the gap n the mandate given by Congress to Federal agencies and the rovided to fill that mandate.

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission is an excellent le of Government's half-hearted commitment to equal oppor-
. In 1964 we passed the Civil Rights Act which prohibited disatory employment practices based on race, color, religion, sex, onal origin. In 1971 we have still to grant the tools necessary to e that mandate. The Equal Employment Opportunity Enforce-Act of 1971, which we are considering today, would give the ission the necessary structure and power to make equal employpportunity a reality.

President has talked to us about making Americans proud of ork; that all work should be considered honorable, a proud con-on to the Nation. But how honorable can it be when minority s and women hold the lowest paying jobs, are the first to be laid ing cutbacks, have few benefits and in many areas are system-y discriminated against moving into jobs involving greater skills aining? What commitment does the Government give to make rk honorable, when it will not even protect the rights of large nts of our labor force whom we know are discriminated against?
e have seen too many times, the capacity to hold hearings, pro-udies, and hold informal negotiating meetings is no substitute l enforcement power. These are preliminary techniques. Withal enforcement power under law, companies or individual ems will continue discriminatory practices until it is no longer ble and convenient to maintain such practices. Often the source riminatory patterns is inertia rather than deliberate intent. But that does not lessen the injustice and economic damage done to t recipients.

Despite the real progress made in fighting employment discrimi tion since 1964, the fragmentation of effort by Federal agencies h resulted in a diffuse and often uncoordinated effort to enforce t provisions of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Responsibility for Federal efforts to fight employment discrimi tion has rested with the Office of Contract Compliance in the Depa ment of Labor; in the Civil Service Commission--for the employees the Federal Government; with the Attorney General in the Just Department--initiation of pattern and practice suits; and with t investigatory and conciliation efforts of the EEOC. The number charges filed with the Commission has been increasing yearly since inception and in over 63 percent of the cases investigated they fou discrimination. But in over half these cases were not resolved throu "voluntary means."

The EEOC enforcement bill that we are considering today combi the structural and legal changes that are needed to make equal opp tunity for all American citizens—regardless of race, sex, national o gin, color, or religion--a reality. The consolidation of all Federal e forcement machinery and the granting of judicially enforceable ce and-desist powers are a fundamental necessity in bridging the g between the mandate given by Congress to the EEOC and the abi to fulfill it.

While I appreciate the points of view of Representative Erlenb and of the minority of the committee who supported his substitute feel that it is simply not feasible to expect the EEOC to undert individual court cases on behalf of individuals. Both in terms of i posing a great burden on the judicial system because of the enorm caseloads which would result, and the protracted litigation result from suits in civil rights cases, I believe that the Erlenborn substit simply does not meet the needs of individual citizens. The Equal E ployment Opportunity Commission is a regulatory agency in much same fashion as Federal Trade Commission and the Securities E change Commission, and it should have the same powers to pro minorities and women as those agencies are empowered to pro consumers and investors.

Although administrative transfers are always resisted because Fe eral agencies too often seek to keep all possible powers and progra under their control, it is an eminently sensible concept to concentr all enforcement responsibilities in a single agency. At the very le it would reduce overlay and would encourage coordination of t program. At best, it would result in uniformity and concerted effort development of the law, goals, policies, and procedures for ending e ployment discrimination in the United States.

The Erlenborn substitute does not deal with any of these structu changes nor would it extend coverage of Title VII to the groups employees who are not presently covered by the act. This inclu employees of State and local governments, personnel of educatio institutions, and employees in establishments employing eight or m but fewer than 25, individuals. In addition, the substitute would li the amount of back pay which could be awarded in cases of discri nation and would prohibit class action suits. This is clearly a ba step and could only serve to aid industries and unions rather he working man and woman.

difficult to reconcile the rhetoric of opportunities for the work-an and woman in America with the reality of labor statistics:
n who work full time earn about 58 percent as much as men. A n with a college diploma can expect to earn the equivalent of a ith a high school education. Minority males earn 67 percent as as white males. In addition, unemployment among these groups h higher than the national average because many are considered inal workers" and not counted among the unemployed. Many rs such as Spanish-American agricultural workers who are sup-to be receiving the minimum wage are not, and they have no se. The percentage of women in top Government jobs—1.5 per-shows that the Federal Government itself contains systematic ination. Low wages, frequent layoffs, limited job benefits, inbility to learning new job skills—these are all discriminatory es suffered by minority groups within the United States.
e in work cannot come until there is equal opportunity in work.
is a clear obligation on the part of Government to provide the to make the words of Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act a . Therefore, I will vote against the Erlenborn substitute and Equal Employment Opportunity Enforcement Act of 1971, 746, as reported out of committee.

Podell. Mr. Chairman, when Congress created the Equal Em-nt Opportunity Commission in 1964, it intended to provide a n to one of our Nation's most acute social problems, baseless ination against members of minority groups. That discriminas resulted in underemployment and lack of reasonable advance-pportunities for those minority members who have been for-enough to gain employment.

ng the 88th Congress, it was made clear that in order to stamp insidious evil of employment discrimination, a strong pro-ment of national policy favoring equal employment opportu-private industry was necessary. There was clearly differing s, however, on how to achieve these results. No less than a dozen hensive bills were introduced and more than 530 hours of de-ok place. Finally, after much lengthy consideration, the present II to the Civil Rights Act was enacted.

impact of such legislation has been substantial. The EEOC's nual report noted that the Commission had received 8,854 ints, rather than the projected 2,000 cases, which it characters a "dramatic response to the new law which reflected the nce of civil rights organizations and minority persons in this enue to relief from discrimination."

Commission's fourth annual report, published in 1970, similarly s a report of the progress the EEOC has already made, ex-g satisfaction with the number of conciliations achieved, the tive acts programs inspired, the legal precedents which have veloped, the data that had been accumulated, the State action d been prompted, and the new methods which had been imple-of public confrontation and visitation of individual plants, industries, and geographic areas. Further, the report indicates the EEOC was now handling an incoming annual volume of o 17,000 cases.

Despite such achievements, however, the Commission continues suffer from a most serious handicap. There is a patent need to am the enforcement scheme contained in Title VII. The Commissio now relatively powerless to change discriminatory employment p tices of respondents. After a failure of conciliation efforts, the al edly aggrieved person is simply left to make his way alone in unfamiliar and formidable milieu of the courts in order to ob redress. The Commission only participated as intervenor or am curiae in 96 Title VII cases in fiscal 1969. This is clearly not a realis enforcement procedure.

This House has before it a bill sponsored by Representa Hawkins—H.R. 1746—which seeks to correct this deficiency in act. H.R. 1746 gives the EEOC power to order employers to cease desist from their discriminatory practices. Since 1966, Congress proposed giving cease-and-desist power to the EEOC. For one rea or another these efforts have been stymied. This vital issue is befor again today, and I sincerely hope that this enforcement power wil finally granted to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commiss

An examination of statistics with respect to the progress of e employment opportunities conclusively shows that the current vo tary approach has failed to eliminate employment discrimination. T time has come to end employment discrimination once and for all a to make available for every individual the opportunity for the s respect that goes hand in hand with a job commensurate with a c zen's ability.

True justice demands an affirmative vote for this essential legislati

Mr. Frenzel. Mr. Chairman, prior to the floor debate on H 1746, I had been prepared to vote for the Erlenborn substitute ame ment. There are many reasons for doing so. The Erlenborn ame ment would give the EEOC the ability to take its cases to court. T is a strong power which is especially potent as a threat in working compliance agreements. It may even be a better weapon than cease-and-desist powers sought by the sponsors of H.R. 1746.

Also, the track record of the EEOC has not been such as to insp my confidence to place strong powers in it. The blame for noncom ance and a heavy backlog cannot all be placed on the EEOC. Ne theless, at least in my State, when our human rights department given the ability to work through the APA—and later given stron powers than mere cease-and-desist authority—these powers w granted only after the Department has achieved a first-class com ance record and gained the confidence of both complainants a defendants. On the record, I do not have that kind of confidence
the EEOC.

I do not believe the powers granted to regulatory commissions analogous to the powers H.R. 1746 seeks to give to EEOC. I am sure that the NLRB analogy is quite comparable.

For these reasons I lean toward the Erlenborn amendment. Inde
I would feel comfortable voting for it. It would be surely a safer, perhaps an even more effective, path toward equal opportunity employment. But, in these times, it is not always appropriate to comfort and safety. I believe we ought to seek instead the quick path to equal employment opportunity. Equality has been delayed already. In granting cease-and-desist powers to EEOC, there is risk, of course. But, I believe that the Administrative Procedure contains safeguards sufficient so that the risk lies primarily with EEOC, a Commission theoretically at least responsive if not untable to the President. In addition, the Dent amendments lessen risk of arbitrary actions by the EEOC. The notice amendment icularly tends to "defang" some objections to the administrative ess.

naller employers may find they prefer the hearing procedures un- APA rather than the expensive, unfamiliar, and time-consuming ess of going to court. Surely the court system is still available to stop the APA.

nerefore, I intend to vote for the committee bill. If the Erlenborn ndment prevails, I do not believe that the cause of human rights be set back. Nor do I believe that, if H.R. 1746 prevails, businesses be subjected to harassment without due process. In choosing the nittee alternative, I am simply looking for the quickest and best to bring equality of employment opportunity to this country.

rs. Mink. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my strong sup- for H.R. 1746, the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforce- Act of 1971. This legislation would greatly improve and expand Federal Government's efforts to eradicate discriminatory hiring promotion practices. It would revitalize the commitment to employment opportunity which Congress initiated in 1964 with ssage of the Civil Rights Act.

scrimination, regardless of its basis, mocks the principles of ity which have animated and guided this Nation since its very tion. But discrimination is much more than a philosophical gruity: it is an abhorrent fact of American life and a debilitating often intolerable burden on those who must struggle against it. ite our cherished principles, minority groups and women are still d equal employment opportunities in our society.

though still unsolved, the plight of minority groups in this coun- s at least recognized as shameful and unjust. Equally serious, ver, is the discrimination inflicted against working women who additionally contend with the widespread belief that their cause ther serious nor justified. The view that employment discrimina- against women is perfectly natural and only reflects the inherent ences between the sexes continues to the detriment of the en- Nation. However, as the Education and Labor Committee report is bill unequivocably states:

crimination against women is no less serious than other forms of prohibited yment practices and is to be accorded the same degree of social concern to any type of unlawful discrimination.

cause existing legislation has failed to eliminate discriminatory oyment practices, we must again concern ourselves with this to insure that all Americans, regardless of their race, religion, r national origin, share equal access to employment opportuni- H.R. 1746 would vest the major responsibility for ending illegal iscrimination with the Equal Employment Opportunity Com- n and would increase its powers and broaden its jurisdiction dingly. Established by Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, EEOC has made a notable effort to reduce employment discrimination but has been severely hampered by its hitherto limit enforcement powers. Lacking this authority, the Commission has been able to produce an acceptable degree of compliance from vio tors, and barring passage of this bill, there is no reason to exp any improvement in the future.

H.R. 1746 would give the EEOC the authority to issue judicia enforceable cease-and-desist orders and would transfer to it Justice Department's authority to prosecute "pattern or practi suits. This consolidation of authority would enable the Commiss to quickly remedy individual grievances while simultaneously mo ing to eliminate the larger patterns and practices which they reve By giving the EEOC effective enforcement powers, we will great improve not only its ability to respond to violations but to preve them as well. If it is known that the Commission can and will against violators, its attempts to secure voluntary compliance will doubtedly be more successful.

The purpose of this legislation is to end employment discriminatio and this goal cannot be served by dispersing the agencies charg with achieving it. The Government's responsibility and commitme to those denied equal rights is too great to be sacrificed to administr tive inefficiency and confusion. Past experience has shown that o a concerted and coordinated effort has any chance of reducing t incidence of job discrimination. In recognition of this fact, H.R. 17 would transfer the Office of Contract Compliance from the Depar ment of Labor to the EEOC, thereby assuring a systematic a directed approach to the problem.

The Office of Contract Compliance was created to oversee the e ployment policies of Government contractors to insure that their h ing and promotion practices were in compliance with Federal sta ards. Government contractors are among the largest and most inf ential in the Nation and the policies and practices which they ado have a significant impact on the rest of the business communit Through the Government-wide contract compliance program, t OFCC seeks to prevent any indirect Federal subsidization of emplo ment discrimination and to guarantee that the Government's treme dous purchasing power operates as a force for social improvement. T OFCC's efforts to end job discrimination by Government contracto would be an integral part of the EEOC's larger effort to achieve eq employment opportunity throughout American society, and no pu pose is served by their continued separation.

In addition to improving the enforcement and administration Federal laws prohibiting job discrimination, this bill would broad the EEOC's jurisdiction to include previously exempted Feder State, and local government employees and certain employees co nected with educational institutions. One year following its date of e actment it would also extend coverage to all employers and lab unions with eight or more employees or members, thus including m lions of persons unprotected because of the present restriction requ ing 25 or more employees or members.

There is no reason why persons working in the public sector shou not enjoy the same protection and rights as those in the private. Go ernment employment practices should serve as a model for the re of the Nation and be the first area freed of prejudice and restricti

Federal Government in particular must effect internal employ- reform to emphasize its firm and unrelenting commitment to l employment opportunity. Leadership by example is a prerequi- for the success of all our other efforts.

ie Civil Service Commission is the agency responsible for imple- ing and enforcing equal employment policies within the Federal rnment. However, its record has been less than successful because t only lacks the necessary expertise but suffers from a built-in ict of interest whenever it is called upon to investigate hiring or notion complaints. It is unreasonable to expect any improvement ng as the Commission continues to sit in judgment of its own poli- and practices, many of which continue to promote systematic dis- ination. I have repeatedly seen the difficulties this poses for a Fed- mployee or applicant seeking relief from unfair and unwarranted ments.

r years, I have fought to gain equal rights for women employees e Federal Government, particularly those employed by the over- dependents schools system. On the basis of this experience, I that we must empower the EEOC to protect all Federal em- es from arbitrary regulations and summary verdicts.

transferring the Civil Service Commission's civil rights en- ment function to the EEOC, we would provide an independent impartial review for all persons whose employment rights have violated because of their race, religion, or sex. This move would prevent the Civil Service Commission from continuing its own in- l equal employment programs but would provide for their modi- on should they prove insufficient.

ere is no reason for omitting Government employees from the ction offered by the EEOC, and, similarly, there is no justification xcluding teachers and other employees of educational institutions . as the committee report clearly documents:

crimination against minorities and women in the field of education is as sive as discrimination in any other area of employment.

is especially important that employment in our educational insti- ns be open to all on an equal basis, for they have an unparalleled rtunity to free the future from present discriminatory attitudes practices. The example which our educational system sets has an culable impact on the attitudes and beliefs of the youth of this try, and we cannot permit discrimination to infect and damage nother generation.

r. Chairman, all of the provisions of this bill are essential if we going to make any headway against job discrimination in this try. Taken together, they promise that equal opportunity will one e secure for all our citizens. I urge all of my colleagues to join me pporting this bill without amendment.

r. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, the lines have long been drawn in the e over giving the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission -and-desist powers. Since 1965, various measures have been offered th Houses to strengthen Title VII enforcement. The Members of Chambers have heard the arguments for too long. We are at an sse, and the time for positive action is yesterday.

though no one today is so unsophisticated as to rise up in favor of imination and racism, the fact is that only the words have changed. The attitudes are there. The methods are there. And t hypocrisy is there.

This, then, is the problem we face in the controversy between t Hawkins bill, H.R. 1746, and the administration bill, H.R. 9247. Bo sides claim to want strict enforcement of Title VII. Both claim to al inequities in employment. But when one looks not-so-far beneath t surface of the arguments, the intent of those who would oppose cea and-desist power for the EEOC is quite plain.

What we must do is project ourselves into the future for a mon Given the amount of money we intend to use in funding Title V enforcement efforts, where would the small amount we are likely to do the most good? There are no guarantees that additional mon appropriated for the courts would be spent in expediting discrimi tion cases. If we appropriate funds for EEOC's enforcement effo on the other hand, we can hold the Commission accountable for performance.

We all claim to be searching for the most efficient and effective mea of eliminating discrimination in employment. Given this claim, think that our only alternative is to strengthen the Equal Employm Opportunity Commission itself. And the only way to do that—I m to really give it the strength it needs—is to give it the option to iss cease-and-desist orders where prompt decisive action is required.

The proponents of the administration measure argue that court d lays are insignificant because of the availability of temporary restra ing orders. What they neglect to mention is that such orders are rar useful and seldom granted in employment discrimination cases. T court will say, "Stop discriminating until we have investigated t merits of your case." It will not temporarily reinstate the worker temporarily award him backpay. It will only maintain the status q which, we all agree, must be changed, not perpetuated.

We should forget about temporary relief and create a system wh will provide a prompt—and final—decision. The courts have failed this respect in the past. Administrative enforcement is the solution the future.

In addition to expediting decisions, administrative enforcem would yield two additional advantages. The first is that decisi would conform to a national standard. National criteria cannot established within the context of the courts which, as we all kn differ from State to State, region to region.

The second advantage of the administrative process is that co plaints would be heard by experts. In its report, the committee point out that while certain types of discrimination are not readily appa ent to the layman, they are real and illegal. The Commission hear officers would have a trained eye for such devices as placement te which are geared to the white middle-class applicant.

I have explained why I favor cease and desist over court enfor ment. But my absolute opposition to H.R. 9247 is based upon even mo serious considerations.

In subtle but substantial ways, the administration bill would grav weaken even existing remedies. The bill would limit the coverage Title VII, minimize damage awards against discriminating employe and unions, and hamstring private individuals' efforts to enforce Ti VII by private litigation. It ignores the more than 10 million State a l government employees; it limits back pay collectable to 2 years; it eliminates private class action law suits, presently the single effective remedy. Its passage would be a great leap backward in struggle for equal employment opportunity.

urge my colleagues to join me today in recognizing—and ferreting —the hyprocrisy which has, so far, kept our civil rights laws rotting e books. If we are sincere about our commitment to equality in em- ment, we will pass the Hawkins bill by a resounding margin.

r. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, it has been clear for some time the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission lacks effective er to enforce our laws against job discrimination. William H. wn, Chairman of the Commission, reports that it was "able to ve either a partially or totally successful conciliation" in only t 18 percent of the 40,000 employment discrimination charges re- d during the first 4 years of its existence, a dismal record, Mr. rman, by any standard. Needless to say, I support the general osition that its powers be expanded.

annot support, however, the bill reported by the Committee on ation and Labor, for in treating the ineffectiveness of the EEOC ommittee has given it authority far beyond its needs—authority h can only serve to compromise the principles of due process and ation of powers. That the legislation carries this to an even fur- extreme, extending the jurisdiction of the Commission to cover act enforcement, pattern and practice suits, and State and local rnments, seems to me final evidence of the committee's irrespon- ty in dealing with this crucial matter. Even now, Mr. Chairman, EOC is faced with a 1½ to 2-year backlog of cases: to expand its diction would manifoldly increase its present inefficiency, slow- ven further the disposal of discrimination cases.

e key article of the committee bill would permit the Commission ue cease-and-desist orders when it has determined after investiga- and hearings that an employer has engaged in discriminatory tices. This is, of course, in marked contrast to its present power ly to conciliate employer-employee differences. That power is, I t, useless. But the fact that it is useless does not warrant its re- ment by a provision which would make the EEOC an all- rful quasi-judicial administrative agency. By giving it the re- sibilities of investigator, prosecutor and judge the committee is usly undermining the doctrine of separation of powers: it would milar to letting policemen arrest, try, and punish citizens on the t at the point of a gun.

less important, Mr. Chairman, the committee bill would create tem in which the burden of proof, contrary to any notion of due ss, would rest upon the defendant and not the plaintiff. On receipt harge, the Commission would be required to find reasonable cause e issuing a formal complaint. The mere issuance of the formal laint, then, would be a presumption of the defendant's guilt, and uld be faced with the anomaly of proving his own innocence.

ese two arguments seem to me reason enough to reject the com- e's bill and accept the substitute offered by my distinguished gue from Illinois (Mr. Erlenborn). His legislation would author- e Commission to initiate suits in Federal district courts against citrant employers greatly increasing its powers without endangering the right of Americans to due process of law and without com promising the separation of powers principle. If the employer refuse to correct injustices, the Commission would act as prosecutor and en forcer, but never as judge and jury.

This makes greater sense when we realize that even in the com mittee bill the courts serve as the employer's last resort. Mr. Erlenbor has proven conclusively that initial resort to district courts is a muc speedier way of disposing cases than the long and arduous processes o agency investigations and hearings. If only in the interest of efficiency the committee bill should be rejected.

We must realize, Mr. Chairman, that effectiveness normally goe hand in hand with efficiency. This bill before us today would only in tensify the failures of the Equal Employment Opportunity Com mission, while seriously undermining the principles of due process an separation of powers. Accordingly, I urge that it be defeated.

Mr. LEGGETT. Mr. Chairman, considerable strides have been mad in equal employment since the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Firms and cor porations which only a few years ago rigidly restricted their executiv suites to white Anglo-Saxon Protestants are now sending representa tives to the campuses in determined and sincere efforts to recruit blac graduates for management positions. Similarly, unions which wer once bastions of discrimination have one by one begun to open their ranks to promising young men regardless of race.

But we have a long way to go. For every corporation or unio sincerely determined to open its ranks, we can find one only interested in tokenism. Unfortunately, the same is true of a number of Govern ment agencies.

Giving teeth to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commissio will not solve all our problems, but it will help. We have before us today two bills. One, the original Hawkins bill, is highly desirable The other, the Erlenborn substitute, is considerably weaker, and in my opinion it is not enough for 1971.

Some may feel the Hawkins bill goes too far, and thereby create inequities. The gentleman from California plans to offer three amend ments, which I will support, which will answer most of these objec tions. These amendments would impose a 2-year limit on backpay liability, would rule out quotas from the Federal contract compliance program, and would require the defendant to be notified within 1 days of the filing of a complaint.

So we will have to decide between the Hawkins bill and the Erlen born substitute.

The Hawkins bill would give the Commission the power to directly issue cease and desist orders. The Erlenborn substitute would force it to go through the already overloaded courts.

The Hawkins bill would empower the Commission to handle its own litigation. The substitute would have the Attorney General represent the EEOC in appeals. In this year of our Lord 1971 I believe the substitute's potential for abuse does not require explanation.

The bill permits class action; the substitute does not.

In short, the substitute leaves those who have suffered employment discrimination to the mercies of the Attorney General. It forces them to suffer the delays of our overloaded courts, and it adds to the over loading even more by preventing class decisions.

rge my colleagues to cast their votes for true liberty and justice ll, by voting for the original bill and against the substitute.
. Robison of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting—and d to vote for—the committee bill, H.R. 1746. I recognize that there avorable things which can be said about both the committee bill he proposed substitute, H.R. 9247; and I recognize, too, that sev-utstanding business leaders in the Nation and in my congressional ict have expressed the opinion that the committee bill places an ir burden on segments of the business community. But, on balance, l the committee bill gives us the best chance to further equal em-ment opportunities for all American workers, and does so in a ner consistent with the themes of justice and fairness which are ghtfully important to my friends in the business community.
ere is little debate today about the necessity for some action.
vone appears to agree that more can—and should—be done at the al level to insure all citizens equal access to available job markets.
ments of the committee bill and the substitute bill both agree that qual Employment Opportunity Commission needs a form of en-ment power. The only question is what kind of enforcement r is the fairest and most effective to all involved.
e substitute bill would permit EEOC attorneys to sue in Federal ct courts in cases where the EEOC has found reasonable cause ieve a violation has occurred. In the abstract, this seems reasonnough. But litigation in the Federal courts can be a lengthy, xpensive process—to everyone concerned. The average length ne for a Federal court action, for example, is 19 months. By ng the district courts with all Federal job discrimination cases, backlog can only increase. Meanwhile, those allegedly discrimiagainst are still frozen from a possible job opportunity. In this of case, I doubt the effectiveness of such enforcement; and I think ess leaders should also realize that defending actions in this way ng to be an expensive proposition indeed.
e committee bill, on the other hand, proposes to give EEOC auzation to issue complaints, hold hearings, and where an unl employment practice is found, issue appropriate orders, subject urse, to judicial review. This "cease-and-desist" method of en-ment is the same type of mechanism given to virtually every other al regulatory agency and is the same adopted by 32 of the 37 s which have agencies to enforce equal employment opportunity —including New York.
course, if a full hearing is demanded, a final decision might still several months to be reached—although not nearly as long as the ge Federal court action—but since the agency would have "ceasedesist" authority, it should be able to settle complaints much more litiously without going to hearing. This has been the experience e NLRB, for example, where 95 percent of its cases do not go to ng. This is as much a protective device for the businessman as it the complainant since it cuts off the threat of scurrilous com-ts dragging them into extensive and expensive litigation.
ere appears to be little grievance about the operation of the State ies already in existence which have powers roughly equivalent ose proposed in the committee bill. At least, I have never had a business complain to me about the operation in New York. I suspect this is the case because due process for all parties is built into the mechanism used by the State agencies, just as it is built into Federal regulatory efforts by means of the Administrative Procedure Act. This act would apply to the powers given to the EEOC, just as it applies to actions taken by the other Federal regulatory agencies.

Under the APA, fair notice is required to all parties, just as all parties have the right to present their cases before both the hearing examiner and the Commission, to rebut adverse evidence, and to cross-examine witnesses. The hearing examiners are isolated from the rest of the Agency, and are prohibited from taking advice from the Agency's personnel—to preserve objectivity. The hearing examiners are recruited not by the agency, but by the Civil Service Commission through a process of competitive examinations: and therefore, they should be as independent and fair as any part of the Federal judiciary. Finally, the ultimate safeguard of the rights of the parties is the right of review in a U.S. court of appeals.

I believe that guaranteeing all Americans—irrespective of race, color or creed—an equal chance for employment is surely as primary a Federal priority as those functions presently carried out by such agencies as the Federal Trade Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, and so forth. What better way to support the President's call for a rejuvenated "work ethic" in this country than to unequivocally demand equal access to all Americans for available job opportunities?

This is no radical notion, but the most basic of rights we are discussing. This is no bipartisan measure, but a concept which should be supported by Members of both parties who are concerned with effective enforcement of fair employment practices. As a Republican, I feel no small obligation to my party's history of supporting the causes of equal opportunity and personal dignity. As an American, I would consider it the greatest of hyprocrisies to give lip service to equality if we are not prepared to enforce such equality in the most effective manner possible.

Mr. Shour. Mr. Chairman, I take strong exception to H.R. 1746 as it has been reported out of committee and urge my fellow Members to vote against the bill.

Equal opportunity for job placement is a crucial issue, one of the most important social matters at this point in our Nation's history. Yet, H.R. 1746 goes beyond the proper limits of governmental control by granting powers to a commission that are powers only properly granted to courts of law.

To decide whether one party is right and the other party wrong is the very essence of jurisprudence. The court system is designed to insure that fairness is the byword of that decisionmaking. A commission is not. Many Federal boards and commissions regulate various things from electricity to use of the public airways. But human beings are not kilovolts or radio waves. They are people, with distinctly different characteristics. In governing kilovolts and radio waves, we deal with specifics. Certain amounts can be ascertained as the right amount for each does its job to the same degree. Yet human beings are not so constructed. In deciding distinctly human issues, there is a great deal of between the opposite ends of the spectrum. A computer can be amed to decide right from wrong. But there are shades of gray are a permanent part of the human condition. The American s are designed to balance all those side issues and resolve any oversy with an equitable solution.

. Chairman, it is sheer folly to prostitute the court's role in renderqual justice for all, in favor of granting judicial powers to a comon that cannot avoid bias and political pressure. Unless claims of mination are kept in the judicial system's area of responsibility, e negating any further efforts to combat discrimination in this ry, because we cannot guarantee fairness. The courts alone are ed to accomplish the task of making fair, unbiased decisions.
must, as the law making body of this great land, ask ourselves l questions in weighing the merits of H.R. 1746 and other antiminatory legislation.
st. Are we, by virtue of legislating a quasi-judicial function onto mission, accomplishing something far different than the original of equal opportunity legislation? Are we now moving toward g American employers to be biased toward minority applicants se they are members of a minority? Have we inadvertently d a monstrosity that is coercing employers to hire a black, or no, or woman, or anyone else because they are black, or Mexicanican, or female, with only secondary consideration for the quali-ns of the applicant for the actual job to be performed?
ond. Are we, in our self-righteous zeal to benefit the minorities, ng on the rest of America? Are we thus creating through H.R. nd its provisions for judicial action by the Commission, not more ty before employers, but discrimination by them in their hiring?
h prejudicial hiring for, any different than the prejudice against puritanically condemn? Are we thus forcing employers to pracegal discrimination because of race?
rd. Is the day far off when we will see a white man bring forward plaint that another man was hired instead of himself, not because her man was better qualified but because the business needed to heir quota of persons of the other man's color? ny feel in this country that equal employment opportunity is dent on what color you are, just like it was years ago, only now lor has been reversed. That, gentlemen is racial discrimination, s much now as 20 years ago, and legislation like H.R. 1746 does away with it, it promotes it. We are allowing equal opportunity nforced only for one segment of the population, while ignoring, east not applying with as great a zeal, the same right to all other nts of the society.
ial harmony, being a very sensitive and crucial issue, must be ed to the letter of the word, equal. The only way we can insure artisan, constitutionally sound efforts toward such harmony is gh this Nation's courts, not by usurping the responsibilities of the by granting commissions far-reaching powers with wide-g possibilities.
losing, I ask each of you to look deep inside yourselves and ask:
rejudice for, somehow, different than prejudice against?"
does one create the other, with prejudice by any other name, lice still the same?

Mr. RARICK. Mr. Chairman, the people of my district believe in the opportunity for every individual to fulfill his God-given talents and abilities, but they also feel it not the proper role for Congress to mislead people into believing Government can insure this right through legalized program of discrimination. This is true even by "equal employment opportunity," the Government intended that the individual best qualified would get the job, regardless of race, religion, or national origin.

But, unfortunately, this is not the case. Time and experience have proven that what this Government means by "equal employment opportunity" is not the great American ideal that the individual best qualified gets the job, but rather that an employer is coerced into hiring a certain percentage of minority groups to maintain judicially constructed racial proportions. It is no longer the question of getting the job done—pragmatism, that great American social philosophy is dead. Government does not concern itself with getting the job done producing a competitive product, or making a profit: Government under EEOC only worries if there is a proper racial balance of employees assigned and on the job.

Under the EEOC rulings, race becomes the rule and guide, not opportunity. Violation of equal employment regulations is presumed if racial quotas are not met. The EEOC runs the employment, not the employer or businessman. The practical result is that the employer is forced to racial hiring practices guided by judicially constructed percentages to stay out of trouble and avoid expensive legal actions.

What has occurred and destroyed the State public school system of this great Nation now threatens to destroy the laboring system that has built America. Just as Federal courts have moved into communities and demanded an unworkable liberal application of proper "racial proportions" in the public schools, this EEOC, an agency of the Government, has moved into city after city and instituted plans that require certain minority percentages in labor and employment on Government jobs. The end is not in sight as the Federal Government moves from city to city destroying the makeup of the laboring force by removing all qualifications for employment and insisting on unworkable racial proportions, regardless of experience, training, or productivity.

We have even seen recently in this city, our Nation's Capital, the idea advanced that the requirement of a high school diploma and civil service test be dropped in consideration for employment as a district fireman. The employment criteria was not going to be dropped because of inability to get qualified men, but simply to let unqualified minority applicants be guaranteed employment.

These practices, however, are not the extent or the limit of the governmental attempt to provide the minority groups with compensatory advantages rather than "equal employment."

One of the glaring examples of actual favoritism practiced by this Government occurs in the Small Business Administration's practice of letting a Government contract without the benefit of competitive bidding. Known as "Project M," this operation has appeared several times recently in the course of inquiries I made in behalf of my constituents concerning SBA matters. Two letters that I received on May 27 of this year indicate the extent of favoritism engaged in the opera-nt and strengthening of manufacturing, construction, and service-related wned and operated by "disadvantaged" persons. Section 8(a) contracts are used to assist these disadvantaged firms to achieve in a few years a truly itive position in both the commercial and Government marketplaces.

s SBA practice of awarding contracts to minority firms without t of competitive bidding disturbed the construction industry of iana and they asked the Comptroller General's office to institute mediate review of this decision with representatives from the al construction organizations present and allowed to testify.
rtunately, their request was not granted, perhaps because the

MINORITY FIRMS TO GET AID IN METRO BIDDING

(By Fred Barnes)

ials of the Washington area subway agency have been told that the Transon Department will finance a special project to assist minority group bidding on Metro construction contracts.
project will offer technical assistance to minority contractors, such as ccountants and business advisers, that will allow the firms to develop and the proper bids.

If the project produces the desired result—the award of more Metro cont to black companies—it could go a long way toward easing the controversy the subway agency's contracting practices.

Metro general manager Jackson Graham said Transportation officials are p ising "some positive response to our recommendation for a federally-funded nical assistance program by mid-October."

He told the Metro board of directors last week that Transporta officials "are aware of the board's desire to stimulate interest a minority firms on a nationwide basis and indications are that will be taken into account in connection with the technical assist program."

Since the project "is geared to addressing the basic problems fa minority contractors," Graham said, it "will take some time to p duce solid results, but there is every reason to believe it can pro the kind of enduring assistance that will contribute heavily in the l run to the cause of minority entrepreneurship."

Metro's request that the project be established came after the F Jerry A. Moore Jr., a D.C. City councilman and vice chairman of Metro board, charged that the agency was "openly hostile" to b contractors. Moore claimed that Metro's contracting procedures such that black firms are often shut out of the bidding.

GRAHAM'S REPLY

Graham and other Metro officials responded that many small b contractors were not well versed enough in the bidding procedure join the competition for subway contracts.

Out of the first $300 million in contracts and subcontracts for M construction, only about $1 million has gone to minority outfits. T amount, Moore said, "is not encouraging in a project of this size."

The Transportation-financed project would teach minority con tors "management expertise," whether they were seeking to bid Metro contracts or other Government agency contracts.

One important area in which the firms could get aid is estimat their costs for a particular construction job. Some firms, Metro offic feel, have been unable to bid because they haven't been able to ga accurately what their expenses would be.

The Government grant for the project—probably about $200,00 $250,000 for a year—will go to one of several private groups, suc the predominantly black Washington Area Contractors Associat which say they would like to run it.

Metro itself cannot run the project because that would create a c flict-of-interest. The agency would be aiding some firms in submitt bids and then would have to turn around and make an official rec mendation concerning these same bids.

OBJECT TO PROPOSAL

Metro staff officials and suburban members of the Metro board have s ported the project idea from the beginning, but they are opposed to Moo proposal that some contracts be set aside for bidding solely by mino firms.

This type of bidding would be carried out under a program run by Small Business Administration. Metro general counsel John R. Kennedy, h ever, says the subway agency cannot legally join the program, though torneys for SBA, the Commerce Department and the Transportation Dep ment disagree.

e only logical conclusion is that our Government will soon be g us to guarantee that these minority firms who get the bid be- of free Government assistance will be able to complete the job. Government has become an underwriter of the contract bond for that it submitted so that some minority contractor could get ob, I ask that a news report on this practice follow my remarks. is hardly equal opportunity in the American tradition.

. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the Erlenborn sub-, and then, if it is approved—or whether it is or not—I shall gainst the pending measure on final passage.

It is my considered judgment that the pending legislation is u necessary, unfair, inappropriate, and unacceptable to American e ployers who would be affected. I am equally convinced that the mea ure is opposed by the overwhelming majority of the American wo force.

The pending bill would expand and extend bureaucratic cont over industry and other private employment with total disregard i the property rights of those who would be subject to the arbitra power which would be given to the Equal Employment Opportun Commission.

The measure gives to this agency vast authority, backed by fu judicial and police enforcement powers of the Government. Thus Government agency in Washington would be empowered to dicta to an employer whom he can hire, whom he can fire, and whom i can promote—with no right of trial by jury allowed.

Arbitrary exercise of this power could make or break a small bu ness enterprise, and play havoc with the right to employment a career opportunities of many individual workers.

It would deny due process, where valuable personal and proper rights are directly involved.

In a grasp for more bureaucratic power, the bill extends EEO jurisdiction over State and local government employees, and inde invades the courthouses with authority to dictate who the deputy clerks, and other workers may be or who they may not be. It ev invades the schools and employment practices involved there.

This ambitious proposal for more power to be lodged in an u elected Washington agency would give that arm of the Federal Go ernment authority to act as complainant, investigator, prosecuto judge, and jury—all racked up in one package.

As one man pointed out, this measure would create the amazi spectacle of a governmental agency filing a claim with itself again whomsoever it chooses—and then going through a grotesque ceremo of investigating and reporting to itself that such claim should b pressed—then proceeding as prosecutor to present the case to its in a "hearing" before itself—solemnly asking itself to render a de sion which it desires rendered, and finally delivering the judgment a decree which it has besought of itself.

Mr. Chairman, this agency—EEOC—has already established reputation for engaging in discrimination itself. An examination some of its decisions will confirm that fact. Its damage has been som what mitigated, however, because its enforcement powers are large confined to conciliation and agreeable settlements. If not abused, th authority could serve a useful purpose in some instances, although th system lends itself to harassment and time-consuming interfere with normal business activities.

Now, in this legislation, it is for the first time proposed that EEO be given authority to issue cease and desist orders, which should b exercised by a court of competent jurisdiction. That is the way it done at present—through judicial processes.

The present EEOC is a product of the Great Society. It has alread expanded far beyond any original plans. And the cost of it has adde significantly to deficit financing. Enactment of this bill, with all th vast expansion that is envisioned, would add greatly to the number personnel and the added involvement in private enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, this is typical of how a Government agency, once the books, grows and grows and grows. No wonder the Federal Go ernment is getting so big. No wonder American people complain about actions affecting them, over which they have no control—ver which their elected representatives have little if any control.

ere is an old truism which goes like this:

is a monster of such frightful mien,
o be hated needs but to be seen;
seen too oft—familiar with its face,
first despise, then pity, then embrace.

m afraid that is what is happening here. Step by step, power ontrol over individuals is expanded. The matter of discrimination ployment, when it occurs, should be handled by a process of con-on. The average businessman is reasonable and sensible. In a y competitive field, in his employment practices, he is obliged to people who can get along, attract business for him, and produce than some other applicant for the job. That system puts a premimerit and productivity. He should not be put in a straight in exercising his judgment in deciding on an employee's worth his particular needs. Every businessman in America is complain-bout too much Government control over decisions which he is better able to make.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

DENT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

DENT. Mr. Chairman, a vote in the affirmative will be a vote for rlenborn amendment in the nature of a substitute; and a vote t it, a no vote, will be a vote that will preserve the opportunity rther amendments. Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the proposition. The question

Committee divided.

CHAIRMAN. Twelve minutes have expired. Are there any Mem-the Chambers who have not voted and wish to vote?

Mr. FULTON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FULTON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, does not the rule explicitly state that the 12 minutes is the minimum? So, there is no 15-minute expiration. Any Member may vote so long as he is in the Chamber before the final report is made; is that not correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so ruled.

Is there any Member in the Chamber who has not voted but who wishes to vote?

Mr. FULTON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FULTON of Pennsylvania. It is definite, then, that there is no maximum time limitation on a recorded teller vote?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until the vote is so announced.

The Committee divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 200, noes 194, not voting 40, as follows:

92D CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 1746

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

SEPTEMBER 17, 1971

Read twice and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare

AN ACT

To further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1971".

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (6) of subsection (g) of section 705 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–4 (f) (6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to refer matters to the Attorney General with recommendations for intervention in a civil action brought by an aggrieved party under section 706, or for the institution of a civil action by the Attorney General

under section 707, and to recommend institution of appellate proceedings in accordance with subsection (h) of this section, when in the opinion of the Commission such proceedings would be in the public interest, and to advise, consult, and assist the Attorney General in such matters.

(b) Subsection (h) of such section 705 is amended to read as follows:

"(h) Attorneys appointed under this section may, at the direction of the Commission, appear for and represent the Commission in any case in court, provided that the Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court or in the courts of appeals of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by the Commission."

SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (a) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whenever it is charged in writing under oath by a person claiming to be aggrieved, or a written charge has been filed by a member of the Commission where he has reasonable cause to believe a violation of this title has occurred (and such charge sets forth the facts upon which it is based and the person or persons aggrieved) that an employer, employment agency or labor organization has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission, within five days thereafter, shall furnish such employer, employment agency, or labor organization (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') with a copy of such charge and shall make an investigation of such charge, provided that such charge shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission shall determine after such investigation, that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such endeavors may be made public by the Commission without the written consent of the parties, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding. Any officer or employee of the Commission, who shall make public in any manner whatever any information in violation of this subsection shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year.

(b) Subsection (d) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) A charge under subsection (a) shall be filed within one hundred and eighty days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, except that in the case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has followed the procedure set out in subsection (b), such charge shall be filed by the person aggrieved within two hundred and ten days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency. Except as provided in subsections (a) through (d) of this section and in section 707 of this Act, a charge filed hereunder shall be the exclusive remedy of any person claiming to be aggrieved by an unlawful employment practice of an employer, employment agency, or labor organization."

(c) Subsection (e) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-5) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) If within thirty days after a charge is filed with the Commission or within thirty days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c), the Commission has been unable to obtain voluntary compliance with this Act, the Commission may bring a civil action against the respondent named in the charge: Provided, That if the Commission fails to obtain voluntary compliance and fails or refuses to institute a civil action against the respondent named in the charge within one hundred and eighty days from the date of the filing of the charge, a civil action may be brought after such failure or refusal within ninety days against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene in such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending the termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (b) or further efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance."

(d) Subsections (f) through (k) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) are redesignated as subsections (g) through (l), respectively, and, in newly designated subsection (k) the reference to subsection (i) is changed to subsection (j), and the following new section is added after section 706(e) thereof:

"(f) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending final disposition of such charge and the court having jurisdiction over such action shall have the authority to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper: Provided, That no temporary restraining order or other preliminary or temporary relief shall be issued absent a showing that substantial and irreparable injury to the aggrieved party will be unavoidable. It shall be the duty of a court having jurisdiction over proceeding under this section to assign cases for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause such cases to be in every way expedited."

(e) Subsection (h) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) as redesignated by this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(h) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice). Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable. No order of the court shall require the admission or reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union or the hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any back pay, if such individual, pursuant to section 706(a) and within the time required by section 706(d), neither filed a charge nor was named in a charge or amendment thereto, or was refused admission, suspended, or expelled or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin or in violation of section 704(a). No order made hereunder shall include back pay or other liability which has accrued more than two years before the filing of a complaint with said court under this title."

Passed the House of Representatives September 16, 1971.

Attest: W. PAT JENNINGS,

Clerk.

By Mr. DOMINICK:

2617. A bill to further promote equal employment opportunities merican workers. Referred to the Committee on Labor and Pub- elfare.

. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I send to the desk for introduction and ask unanimous consent that its text be printed at the con- n of my remarks.

is clear that the time has come for Congress to provide an en- ment procedure to make a reality out of the purposes and policies tle VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The Equal Employment rtunity Commission is charged with enforcing the law against mination on the basis of race, creed, color or religion in employ- But it is limited in the actions it can take to remedy a violation law. Beyond mediation and voluntary compliance, it can do lit- enforce the law. We must allow the EEOC a means of strong in those cases where it cannot resolve a case through iation.

course, the mechanism which we provide must also be fair and ct the rights of those who are being charged with a violation— ner it be a labor union or an employer. I believe that the superior od for achieving the proper balance between the need to give C enforcement powers and the rights of those charged with vio- s of the law is to permit the EEOC to sue in U.S. district courts it has investigated a charge and found reasonable cause to be- violation of the act has occurred.

is approach is superior for several reasons. First it provides a ination of the expertise of the EEOC in investigating, process- nd conciliating unfair employment cases with the expertise and endence of the Federal courts. The equal employment area is which produces strong emotions among all parties—those dis- nated against, those accused of discriminating, and even those ed with enforcing the law. I believe that these strong emotions d be tempered by restraint when the adjudication of rights is at The Federal courts are best able to provide the tempering int which will allow for a rational resolution of the issues of any case.

ond, the court approach is necessary in order to preserve the ional separation of powers which we as a nation so highly cher- nd protect. Last year this body passed legislation which would authorized employees of the EEOC to initiate charges, investi- the same charges, issue a complaint, prosecute the complaint, icate the merits of the case, and then hear any appeals on the case. In addition, attorneys' fees and discovery fees were allowed to charging parties. While none of these powers is unprecedented, I believe that the combination of authorities which this approach would grant EEOC is without parallel in the entire Federal Government. We cannot permit EEOC to conduct "star chamber" proceedings contrary to our Anglo-American legal tradition.

Therefore, Mr. President, I believe that we should grant to the EEOC the right to go into Federal district court to prosecute those it feels has violated the law. This will remove the quasi-judicial function from the hands of those who are also prosecutor, investigator, and enforcer. The judicial function is the most critical and must be ringed about with the greatest of safeguards. By putting it in the court system, we preserve the safeguards of the respondent and still permit EEOC to be vigorous in the prosecution of cases. Before the court EEOC can take a strong adversary position without fear of accusations of institutional bias. My bill will establish this mechanism. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to examine this question closely and join with me in seeking a fair balance between the need for enforcement and for fair and equitable procedures for all parties.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2617), was ordered to be printed in the Record.

1ST SESSION

S. 2617

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

SEPTEMBER 30, 1971

Mr. DOMINICK introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare

A BILL

To further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1971".

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (6) of subsection (g) of section 705 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–4 (f) (6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to refer matters to the Attorney General with recommendations for intervention in a civil action brought by an aggrieved party under section 706, or for the institution of a civil action by the Attorney General

under section 707, and to recommend institution of appellate proceedings in accordance with subsection (h) of this section, when in the opinion of the Commission such proceedings would be in the public interest, and to advise, consult, and assist the Attorney General in such matters.

(b) Subsection (h) of such section 705 is amended to read as follows:

"(h) Attorneys appointed under this section may, at the direction of the Commission, appear for and represent the Commission in any case in court, provided that the Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court or in the courts of appeals of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by the Commission."

SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (a) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whenever it is charged in writing under oath by a person claiming to be aggrieved, or a written charge has been filed by a member of the Commission where he has reasonable cause to believe a violation of this title has occurred (and such charge sets forth the facts upon which it is based and the person or persons aggrieved) that an employer, employment agency or labor organization has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission, within five days thereafter, shall furnish such employer, employment agency, or labor organization (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') with a copy of such charge and shall make an investigation of such charge, provided that such charge shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission shall determine after such investigation that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informed methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such endeavors may be made public by the Commission without the written consent of the parties, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding. Any officer or employee of the Commission, who shall make public in any manner whatever any information in violation of this subsection shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year.

(b) Subsection (d) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) A charge under subsection (a) shall be filed within one hundred and eighty days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, except that in the case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has followed the procedure set out in subsection (b), such charge shall be filed by the person aggrieved within two hundred and ten days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency. Except as provided in subsections (a) through (d) of this section and in section 707 of this Act, a charge filed hereunder shall be the exclusive remedy of any person claiming to be aggrieved by an unlawful employment practice of an employer, employment agency, or labor organization."

(c) Subsection (e) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) If within thirty days after a charge is filed with the Commission or within thirty days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c), the Commission has been unable to obtain voluntary compliance with this Act, the Commission may bring a civil action against the respondent named in the charge: Provided, That if the Commission fails to obtain voluntary compliance and fails or refuses to institute a civil action against the respondent named in the charge within one hundred and eighty days from the date of the filing of the charge, a civil action may be brought after such failure or refusal within ninety days against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene in such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending the termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (b) or further efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance."

(d) Subsections (f) through (k) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) are redesignated as subsections (g) through (l), respectively, and, in newly designated subsection (k) the reference to subsection (i) is changed to subsection (j), and the following new section is added after section 706(e) thereof:

"(f) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending final disposition of such charge and the court having jurisdiction over such action shall have the authority to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper: Provided, That no temporary restraining order or other preliminary or temporary relief shall be issued absent a showing that substantial and irreparable injury to the aggrieved party will be unavoidable. It shall be the duty of a court having jurisdiction over proceeding under this section to assign cases for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause such cases to be in every way expedited."

(e) Subsection (h) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) as redesignated by this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(h) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice). Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable. No order of the court shall require the admission or reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union or the hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any back pay, if such individual, pursuant to section 706(a) and within the time required by section 706(d), neither filed a charge nor was named in a charge or amendment thereto, or was refused admission, suspended, or expelled or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin or in violation of section 704(a). No order made hereunder shall include back pay or other liability which has accrued more than two years before the filing of a complaint with said court under this title."

Reported by Mr. WILLIAMS, with an amendment

[Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the part printed in italic]

A BILL

To further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, ~~That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971".~~

SEC. 2. Section 701 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e) is amended as follows:

(1) In subsection (a) insert "governments, governmental agencies, political subdivisions," after the word "individuals".

(2) In subsection (b) strike out all before "Provided further", and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) The term 'employer' means a person engaged in an industry affecting commerce who has eight or more employees for each working day in each of twenty or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year, and any agent of such a person, but such term does not include (1) the United States, a corporation wholly owned by the Government of the United States, an Indian tribe, or any department or agency of the District of Columbia subject by statute to procedures of the competitive service (as defined in section 2102 of title 5 of the United States Code), (2) a bona fide private membership club (other than a labor organization) which is exempt from taxation under section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954: Provided, That during the first year after the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, persons having fewer than twenty-five employees (and their agents) shall not be considered employers."

(3) In subsection (c) beginning with the semicolon strike out through the word "assistance".

(4) In subsection (c) strike out between "(A)" and "and such labor organization", and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-five or more during the first year after the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, or (B) eight or more thereafter,"

(5) At the end of subsection (h) insert before the period a comma and the following: "and further includes any governmental industry, business, or activity".

SEC. 3. Section 702 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e-2) is amended to read as follows:

"EXEMPTION

"SEC. 702. This title shall not apply to an employer with respect to the employment of aliens outside any State, or to a religious corporation, association, educational institution, or society with respect to the employment of individuals of a particular religion to perform work connected with the carrying on by such corporation, association, educational institution, or society of its religious activities."

SEC. 4. (a) Subsections (a) through (c) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 259; 42 U.S.C. 2000e-5 (a) - (c)) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Commission is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unlawful employment practice as set forth in section 703 or 704 of this title.

"(b) Whenever a charge is filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved, or by a member of the Commission upon the request of any person claiming to be aggrieved, alleging that an employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining including on-the-job training programs, has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall serve a copy of the charge on such employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') as soon as practicable thereafter and shall make an investigation thereof. Charges shall be in writing and shall contain such information and be in such form as the Commission requires. Charges shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is not reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, it shall dismiss the charge and promptly notify the person claiming to be aggrieved and the respondent of its action. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such informal endeavors may be made public by the Commission, its officers or employees, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding without the written consent of the persons concerned. Any person who makes public information in violation of this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. The Commission shall make its determination on reasonable cause as promptly as possible and, so far as practicable, not later than one hundred and twenty days from the filing of the charge or, where applicable under subsection (c) or (d), from the date upon which the Commission is authorized to take action with respect to the charge.

"(c) In the case of a charge filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State, or political subdivision of a State, which has a State or local law prohibiting the unlawful employment practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, the Commission shall take no action with respect to the investigation of such charge before the expiration of sixty days after proceedings have been commenced under the State or local law, unless such proceedings have been earlier terminated: Provided, That such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effective date of such State or local law. If any requirement for the commencement of such proceedings is imposed by a State or local authority other than a requirement of the filing of a written and signed statement of the facts upon which the proceeding is based, the proceeding shall be deemed to have been commenced for the purposes of this subsection at the time such statement is sent by registered or certified mail to the appropriate State or local authority.

"(d) In the case of any charge filed by a member of the Commission alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State or political subdivision of a State which has a State or local law prohibiting the practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof the Commission shall, before taking any action with respect to such charge, notify the appropriate State or local officials and, upon request, afford them a reasonable time, but not less than sixty days: Provided, That such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effective day of such State or local law; unless a shorter period is requested, to act under such State or local law to remedy the practice alleged.

"(c) A charge under this section shall be filed within one hundred and eighty days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred and a copy shall be served upon the person against whom such charge is made as soon as practicable thereafter, except that in a case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has initially instituted proceedings with a State or local agency with authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, such charge shall be filed by or on behalf of the person aggrieved within three hundred days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency.

"(d) If the Commission determines after attempting to secure voluntary compliance under subsection (b) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved, which determination shall not be reviewable in any court, the Commission shall issue and cause to be served upon the respondent a complaint stating the facts upon which the allegation of the unlawful employment practice is based, together with a notice of hearing before the Commission, or a member or agent thereof, at a place therein fixed not less than five days after the serving of such complaint. Related proceedings may be consolidated for hearing. Any member of the Commission who filed a charge in any case shall not participate in a hearing on any complaint arising out of such charge, except as a witness.

"(g) A respondent shall have the right to file an answer to the complaint against him and with the leave of the Commission, which shall be granted whenever it is reasonable and fair to do so, may amend his answer at any time. Respondents and the person aggrieved shall be parties and may appear at any stage of the proceedings, with or without counsel. The Commission may grant such other person a right to intervene or to file briefs or make oral arguments an amicus curiae or for other purposes, as it considers appropriate. All testimony shall be taken under oath and shall be reduced to writing. Any such proceeding shall, so far as practicable, be conducted in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable in the district courts of the United States under the Rules of Civil Procedure for the district courts of the United States.

"(h) If the Commission finds that the respondent has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons aggrieved by such unlawful employment practice an order requiring the respondent to cease and desist from such unlawful employment practice and to take such affirmative action, including reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organizations, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice), as will effectuate the policies of this title: Provided, That interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the aggrieved person or persons shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. Such order may further require such respondent to make reports from time to time showing the extent to which he has complied with the order. If the Commission finds that the respondent has not engaged in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons alleged in the complaint to be aggrieved an order dismissing the complaint.

"(i) After a charge has been filed and until the record has been filed in court as hereinafter provided, the proceeding may at any time be ended by agreement between the Commission and the parties for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment practice and the Commission may at any time, upon reasonable notice, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it. An agreement approved by the Commission shall be enforceable under subsections (l) through (n) and the provisions of those subsections shall be applicable to the extent appropriate to a proceeding to enforce an agreement.

"(j) Findings of fact and orders made or issued under subsections (h) or (i) of this section shall be determined on the record. Section 554, 555, 556, and 557 of title 5 of the United States Code shall apply to such proceedings.

"(k) Any party aggrieved by a final order of the Commission granting or denying in whole or in part the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in any United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question is alleged to have occurred or in which such party resides or transacts business, or in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, by filing in such court within sixty days after the service of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission and to any other party to the proceeding before the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall file in the court the record in the proceeding as provided in section

2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of the petition the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to grant to the petitioner or any other party, including the Commission, such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such record a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, the order of the Commission and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed or modified. Any party to the proceeding before the Commission shall be permitted to intervene in the court of appeals. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order of the Commission. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its member, or agent shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon the filing of the record with it, the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States, as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

"(l) The Commission may petition any United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question occurred or in which the respondent resides or transacts business, for the enforcement of its order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, by filing in such court a written petition praying that its order be enforced and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order. The Commission shall file in court with its petition the record in the proceeding as provided in section 2112

of title 28, United States Code. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the parties to the proceeding before the Commission. Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein and shall have power to grant to the Commission, or any other party, such temporary relief, restraining order, or other order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such record a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside in whole or in part, the order of the Commission and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed or modified. Any party to the proceeding before the Commission shall be permitted to intervene in the court of appeals. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its members, or agent shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon the filing of the record with it the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

"(m) If no petition for review, as provided in subsection (k), is filed within sixty days after service of the Commission's order, the Commission's findings of fact and order shall be conclusive in connection with any petition for enforcement which is filed by the Commission under subsection (l) after the expiration of such sixty-day period. The clerk of the court of appeals in which such petition for enforcement is filed shall forwith enter a decree enforcing the order of the Commission and shall submit a copy of such decree to the Commission, the respondent named in the petition, and to any other parties to the proceeding before the Commission.

"(n) If within ninety days after service of the Commission's order, no petition for review has been filed as provided in subsection (k), and the Commission has not sought enforcement of its order as provided in subsection (l), any person entitled to relief under the Commissioner's order may petition for a decree enforcing the order in the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question occurred, or in which a respondent named in the order resides or transacts business. The provisions of subsection (m) shall apply to such petitions for enforcement.

"(o) The Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by attorneys appointed by the Commission.

"(p) Whenever a charge is field with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve the power of the Commission to grant effective relief in the proceeding, the Commission shall, after it issues a complaint, bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending its final disposition of such charge, or until the filing of a petition under subsections (k), (l), (m), or (n) of this section, as the case may be, in the United States district court for any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful employment practice concerned is alleged to have been committed, or the judicial district in which the aggrieved person would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful employment practice, but, if the respondent is not found within any such judicial district, such an action may be brought in the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28, United States Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in all cases be considered a judicial district in which such an action might have been brought. Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such injunctive relief or temporary restraining order as it deems just and proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law. Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, except paragraph (a)(2) thereof, shall govern proceedings under this subsection.

"(q)(1) If a charge filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) is dismissed by the Commission, or if within one hundred and eighty days from the filing of such charge or the expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), whichever is later, the Commission has neither issued a complaint under subsection (f) nor entered into an agreement under subsection (f) or (i) which is acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved, the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and within sixty days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon the commencement of such civil action, the Commission shall be divested of jurisdiction over the proceeding and shall take no further action with respect thereto, except that, upon timely application, the court in its discretion may permit the Commission to intervene in such civil action if the Commission certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (c) or (d) or the efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance.

"(2) The right of an aggrieved person to bring a civil action under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall terminate once the Commission has issued a complaint under subsection (f), or has entered into an agreement under subsection (f) or (i) which is acceptable to the Commission and to the person aggrieved: Provided, That if after issuing a complaint the Commission has not issued an order under subsection (h) within a period of one hundred and eighty days of the issuance of the complaint, the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge at any time prior to the Commission's issuance of an order under subsection (h): Provided further, That if the person aggrieved files a civil action against the respondent during the period from one hundred and eighty days to one year after the issuance of the complaint such person shall notify the Commission of such action and the Commission may petition the court not to proceed with the suit. The court may dismiss or stay any such action upon a showing that the Commission has been acting with due diligence on the complaint, that the Commission anticipates the issuance of an order under subsection (h) within a reasonable period of time, that the case is exceptional, and that extension of the Commission's jurisdiction is warranted."

(l) Subsections (f) through (k) of section 706 of such Act and references thereto are redesignated as subsections (r) through (w), respectively.

(c) Section 706(r) of such Act, as redesignated by this section, is amended by adding at the end the following sentence: "Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper."

(d) Section 706(u) and (v) of such Act, as redesignated by this section, are amended (1) by striking out "(e)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(q)", and (2) by striking out "(i)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(u)".

SEC. 5. Section 707 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Effective on the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act, the functions of the Attorney General and the Acting Attorney General, as the case may be, under this section shall be transferred to the Commission, together with such personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available, or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred to the Commission hereby as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions pursuant to this subsection, and the Commission shall thereafter carry out such functions in the manner set forth in subsections (d) and (e) of this section.

"(d) In all suits commenced pursuant to this section prior to the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, proceedings shall continue without abatement, all court orders and decrees shall remain in effect, and the Commission shall be substituted as a party for the United States of America or the Attorney General or Acting Attorney General, as appropriate.

"(e) subsequent to the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, the Commission shall have authority to investigate and act on a charge of a pattern or practice of discrimination, whether filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved or by a member of the Commission: Provided, That all such actions shall be in accordance with the procedures set forth in section 706, including the provisions for enforcement and appellate review contained in subsections (k), (l), (m), and (n) thereof."

SEC. 6. (a) Subsections (b), (c), and (d) of section 709 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 263; 42 U.S.C. 2000e-8(b)-(d)) are amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Commission may cooperate with State and local agencies charged with the administration of State fair employment practices laws and, with the consent of such agencies, may, for the purpose of carrying out its functions and duties under this title and within the limitation of funds appropriated specifically for such purpose, engage in and contribute to the cost of research and other projects of mutual interest undertaken by such agencies, and utilize the services of such agencies and their employees, and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, may pay by advance or reimbursement such agencies and their employees for services rendered to assist the Commission in carrying out this title. In furtherance of such cooperative efforts, the Commission may enter into written agreements with such State or local agencies and such agreements may include provisions under which the Commission shall refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases specified in such agreements or under which the Commission shall relieve any person or class or persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed under this section. The Commission shall rescind any such agreement whenever it determines that the agreement no longer serves the interest of effective enforcement of this title.

"(c) Every employer, employment agency, and labor organization subject to this title shall (1) make and keep such records relevant to the determinations of whether unlawful employment practices have been or are being committed, (2) preserve such records for such periods, and (3) make such reports therefrom as the Commission shall prescribe by regulation or order, after public hearing, as reasonable, necessary, or appropriate for the enforcement of this title or the regulations or orders thereunder. The Commission shall, by regulation, require each employer, labor organization, and joint labor-management committee subject to this title which controls an apprenticeship or other training program to maintain such records as are reasonably necessary to carry out the purpose of this title, including, but not limited to, a list of applicants who wish to participate in such program, including the chronological order in which such applicants were received, and to furnish to the Commission upon request, a detailed description of the manner in which persons are selected to participate in the apprenticeship or other training program. Any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee which believes that the application to it of any regulation or order issued under this section would result in undue hardship may apply to the Commission for an exemption from the application of such regulation or order, and, if such application for an exemption is denied, bring a civil action in the United States district court for the district where such records are kept. If the Commission or the court, as the case may be, finds that the application of the regulation or order to the employer, employment agency, or labor organization in question would impose an undue hardship, the Commission or the court, as the case may be, may grant appropriate relief. If any person required to comply with the provisions of this subsection fails or refuses to do so, the United States district court for the district in which such person is found, resides, or transacts business, shall, upon application of the Commission, have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring him to comply.

"(d) In prescribing requirements pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, the Commission shall consult with other interested State and Federal agencies and shall endeavor to coordinate its requirements with those adopted by such agencies. The Commission shall furnish upon request and without cost to any State or local agency charged with the administration of a fair employment practice law information obtained pursuant to subsection (c) of this section from any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee subject to the jurisdiction of such agency. Such information shall be furnished on condition that it not be made public by the recipient agency prior to the institution of a proceeding under State or local law involving such information. If this condition is violated by a recipient agency, the Commission may decline to honor subsequent requests pursuant to this subsection."

(b) Section 709 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is amended by: (1) redesignating section 709(c) as 709(f)

and (2) by adding immediately after section 709(d) as amended, the following subsection (e):

"(e) Any record or paper required by section 709(e) of this title to be preserved or maintained shall be made available for inspection, reproduction, and copying by the Commission or its representative, or to the Attorney General or his representative, upon demand in writing directed to the person having custody, possession, or control of such record or paper. Unless otherwise ordered by a court of the United States, neither the members of the Commission nor its representative, or the Attorney General, nor his representative shall disclose any record or paper produced pursuant to this title, or any reproduction or copy, except to Congress or any committee thereof, or to a governmental agency, or in the presentation of any case or proceeding before any court or grand jury. The United States district court for the district in which a demand is made or in which a record or paper so demanded is located, shall have jurisdiction to compel by appropriate process the production of such record or paper."

SEC. 7. Section 710 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 264; 42 U.S.C. 2000e-9) is amended to read as follows:

"INVESTIGATORY POWERS

"SEC. 710. For the purpose of all hearings and investigations conducted by the Commission or its duly authorized agents or agencies, section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (49 Stat. 455; 29 U.S.C. 161) shall apply: Provided, That no subpena shall be issued on the application of any party to proceedings before the Commission until after the Commission has issued and caused to be served upon the respondent a complaint and notice of hearing under subsection (f) of section 706."

SEC. 8. (a) Section 703(a)(2) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 255; 42 U.S.C. 2000e-2(a)(2)) is amended by inserting the words "or applicants for employment" after the words "his employees".

(b) Section 703(c)(2) of such Act is amended by inserting the words "or applicants for membership" after the word "membership".

(c)(1) Section 704(a) of such Act is amended by inserting "or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs," after "employment agency" in section 704(a).

(2) Section 704(b) of such Act is amended by (A) striking out "or employment agency" and inserting in lieu thereof "employment agency, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs," and (B) inserting a comma and the words "or relating to admission to, or employment in, any program established to provide apprenticeship or other training by such a joint labor-management committee" before the word "indicating".

(d)(1) The second sentence of section 705(a) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "and all members of the Commission shall continue to serve until their successors are appointed and qualified: Provided, That no such member of the Commission shall continue to serve (1) for more than sixty days when the Congress is in session unless a nomination to fill such vacancy shall have been submitted to the Senate, or (2) after the adjournment sine die of the session of the Senate in which such nomination was submitted".

(2) The fourth sentence of section 705(a) of such Act is amended to read as follows: "The Chairman shall be responsible on behalf of the Commission for the administrative operations of the Commission, and shall appoint, in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, such officers, agents, attorneys, hearings examiners, and employees as he deems necessary to assist it in the performance of its functions and fix their compensation in accordance with the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates: Provided, That assignment, removal, and compensation of hearing examiners shall be in accordance with sections 3105, 3344, 5362, and 7521 of title 5, United States Code."

(c) Section 705(g)(1) of such Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: ", and to accept voluntary and uncompensated services, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3679(b) of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 665(b))".

(f) Section 705(g)(6) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to intervene in a civil action brought by an aggrieved party under section 706."

(g) Section 713 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(e) Except for the powers granted to the Commission under subsection (h) of section 706, the power to modify or set aside its findings, or make new findings, under subsections (i), (k), and (l) of section 706, the rulemaking power as defined in subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, with reference to general rules as distinguished from rules of specific applicability, and the power to enter into or rescind agreements with State and local agencies, as provided in subsection (b) of section 709, under which the Commission agrees to refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases or under which the Commission agrees to relieve any person or class of persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed by section 709, the Commission may delegate any of its functions, duties, and powers to such person or persons as the Commission may designate by regulation, including functions, duties, and powers with respect to hearing, determining, ordering, certifying, reporting or otherwise acting as to any work, business, or matter: Provided, That nothing in this subsection authorizes the Commission to provide for persons other than those referred to in clauses (2) and (3) of subsection (b) of section 556 of title 5 of the United States Code to conduct any hearing to which that section applies.

"(d) The Commission is authorized to delegate to any group of three or more members of the Commission any or all of the powers which it may itself exercise."

(b) Section 711 of such Act is amended by striking out "section 111" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 111 and 1114".

SEC. 9. (a) Section 5314 of title 5 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(55) Chairman, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission."

(b) Clause (72) of section 5315 of such title is amended to read as follows:

"(72) Members, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (4)."

(c) Clause (111) of section 5316 of such title is repealed.

SEC. 10. Section 715 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 715. All authority, functions, and responsibilities vested in the Secretary of Labor pursuant to Executive Order 11246 relating to nondiscrimination in employment by Government contractors and subcontractors and nondiscrimination in federally assisted construction contracts are transferred to the Equal Rights Employment Opportunity Commission, together with such personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, available or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred to the Commission hereby as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions pursuant to this subsection, and the Commission shall hereafter carry out all such authority, functions, and responsibilities pursuant to such order."

SEC. 11. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

~~"NONDISCRIMINATION IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT~~

~~"SEC. 717. (a) All personnel actions affecting employees or applicants for employment (except with regard to aliens employed outside the limits of the United States) in military departments as defined in section 102 of title 5, United States Code, in executive agencies (other than the General Accounting Office) as defined in section 105 of title 5, United States Code (including employees and applicants for employment who are paid from nonappropriated funds), and in those portions of the government of the District of Columbia, and the legislative and judicial branches of the Federal Government having positions in the competitive service, shall be made free from any discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.~~

~~"(b) The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission shall have authority to enforce the provision of subsection (a) and shall issue such rules, regulations, orders, and instructions as it deems necessary and appropriate to carry out its responsibilities hereunder. and the head of each executive department and agency and the appropriate officers of the District of Columbia shall comply with such rules, regulations, orders and instructions: Provided, That such rules and regulations shall provide that an employee or applicant for employment shall be notified of any final action taken on any complaint filed by him thereunder.~~

"(c) Within thirty days of receipt of notice given pursuant to subsection (b), of final action taken on a complaint of discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, or after ninety days from the filing of the initial charge until such time as final action may be taken, an employee or applicant for employment, if aggrieved by the final disposition of his complaint, or by the failure to take final action on his complaint, may file a civil action as provided in section 706(q), in which civil action the head of the executive department or agency, or the District of Columbia, as appropriate, shall be the respondent.

"(d) The provisions of section 706 (q) through (w), as applicable, shall govern civil actions brought hereunder.

"(e) All functions of the Civil Service Commission which the Director of the Office of Management and Budget determines relate to nondiscrimination in Government employment are transferred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

"(f) This section shall become effective six months after the date of enactment of this Act.

"(g) Nothing contained in this Act shall relieve any Government agency or official of its or his primary responsibility to assure nondiscrimination in employment as required by the Constitution, statutes, and Executive orders."

SEC. 12. The amendments made by this Act to section ~~706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 shall not be applicable to charges filed with the Commission prior to the enactment of this Act.~~

That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971".

SEC. 2. Section 701 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 253; 42 U.S.C. 2000e) is amended as follows:

(1) In subsection (a) insert "governments, governmental agencies, political subdivisions," after the word "individuals".

(2) Subsection (b) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The term 'employer' means a person engaged in an industry affecting commerce who has eight or more employees for each working day in each of twenty or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year, and any agent of such a person, but such term does not include (1) the United States, a corporation wholly owned by the Government of the United States, an Indian tribe, or any department or agency of the District of Columbia subject by statute to procedures of the competitive service (as defined in section 2102 of title 5 of the United States Code), or (2) a bona fide private membership club (other than a labor organization) which is exempt from taxation under section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, except that during the first year after the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, persons having fewer than twenty-five employees (and their agents) shall not be considered employers."

(3) In subsection (c) beginning with the semicolon strike out through the word "assistance".

(4) In subsection (e) strike out between "(A)" and "and such labor organization", and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-five or more during the first year after the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, or (B) eight or more thereafter,"

(5) At the end of subsection (h) insert before the period a comma and the following: "and further includes any governmental industry, business, or activity".

SEC. 3. Section 702 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 255; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–1) is amended to read as follows:

"EXEMPTION

"SEC. 702. This title shall not apply to an employer with respect to the employment of aliens outside any State, or to a religious corporation, association, educational institution, or society with respect to the employment of individuals of a particular religion to perform work connected with the carrying on by such corporation, association, educational institution, or society of its religious activities."

SEC. 4. (a) Subsections (a) through (e) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 259; 42 U.S.C. 2000e-5(a)-(e)) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Commission is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unlawful employment practice as set forth in section 703 or 704 of this title.

"(b) Whenever a charge is filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved, or by an officer or employee of the Commission upon the request of any person claiming to be aggrieved, alleging that an employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs, has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall serve a notice of the charge (including the date, place and circumstances of the alleged unlawful employment practice) on such employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') within ten days, and shall make an investigation thereof. Charges shall be in writing and shall contain such information and be in such form as the Commission requires. Charges shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is not reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, it shall dismiss the charge and promptly notify the person claiming to be aggrieved and the respondent of its action. In determining whether reasonable cause exists, the Commission shall accord substantial weight to final findings and orders made by State or local authorities in proceedings commenced under State or local law pursuant to the requirements of subsections (c) and (d). If the Commission determines after such investigation that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such informal endeavors may be made public by the Commission, its officers or employees, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding without the written consent of the persons concerned. Any person who makes public information in violation of this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. The Commission shall make its determination on reasonable cause as promptly as possible and, so far as practicable, not later than one hundred and twenty days from the filing of the charge or, where applicable under subsection (c) or (d), from the date upon which the Commission is authorized to take action with respect to the charge.

"(c) In the case of a charge filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State or political subdivision of a State which has a State or local law prohibiting the unlawful employment practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof the Commission shall take no action with respect to the investigation of such charge before the expiration of sixty days after proceedings have been commenced under the State or local law, unless such proceedings have been earlier terminated, except that such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effective date of such State or local law. If any requirement for the commencement of such proceedings is imposed by a State or local authority other than a requirement of the filing of a written and signed statement of the facts upon which the proceeding is based, the proceeding shall be deemed to have been commenced for the purposes of this subsection at the time such statement is sent by registered or certified mail to the appropriate State or local authority.

"(d) In the case of any charge filed by an officer or employee of the Commission alleging an unlawful employment practice occurring in a State or political subdivision of a State which has a State or local law prohibiting the practice alleged and establishing or authorizing a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof the Commission shall, before taking any action with respect to such charge, notify the appropriate State or local officials and, upon request, afford them a reasonable time, but not less than sixty days (provided that such sixty-day period shall be extended to one hundred and twenty days during the first year after the effective date of such State or local law), unless a shorter period is requested, to act under such State or local law to remedy the practice alleged.

"(e) A charge under this section shall be filed within one hundred and eighty days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred and notice of the charge (including the date, place and circumstances of the alleged unlawful employment practice) shall be served upon the person against whom such charge is made within ten days thereafter, except that in a case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has initially instituted proceedings with a State or local agency with authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto upon receiving notice thereof, such charge shall be filed by or on behalf of the person aggrieved within three hundred days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency.

"(f) If the Commission determines after attempting to secure voluntary compliance under subsection (b) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission, which determination shall not be reviewable in any court, the Commission shall issue and cause to be served upon any respondent not a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision a complaint stating the facts upon which the allegation of the unlawful employment practice is based, together with a notice of hearing before the Commission, or a member or agent thereof, at a place therein fixed not less than five days after the serving of such complaint. In the case of a respondent which is a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, the Commission shall take no further action and shall refer the case to the Attorney General who may bring a civil action against such respondent in the appropriate United States district court. The person or persons aggrieved shall have the right to intervene in such civil action. The provisions of section 706 (q) through (w), as applicable, shall govern civil actions brought hereunder. Related proceedings may be consolidated for hearing. Any officer or employee of the Commission who filed a charge in any case shall not participate in a hearing on any complaint arising out of such charge, except as a witness.

"(g) A respondent shall have the right to file an answer to the complaint against him and with the leave of the Commission, which shall be granted whenever it is reasonable and fair to do so, may amend his answer at any time. Respondents and the person or persons aggrieved shall be parties and may appear at any stage of the proceedings, with or without counsel. The Commission may grant other persons a right to intervene or to file briefs or make oral arguments as amicus curiae or for other purposes, as it considers appropriate. All testimony shall be taken under oath and shall be reduced to writing. Any such proceeding shall, so far as practicable, be conducted in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable in the district courts of the United States under the Rules of Civil Procedure for the district courts of the United States.

"(h) If the Commission finds that the respondent has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons aggrieved by such unlawful employment practice an order requiring the respondent to cease and desist from such unlawful employment practice and to take such affirmative action, including reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organizations, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice), as will effectuate the policies of this title, except that (1) back pay liability shall not exceed that which has accrued more than two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commission, and (2) interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the aggrieved person or persons shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable. Such order may further require such respondent to make reports from time to time showing the extent to which he has complied with the order. If the Commission finds that the respondent has not engaged in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the respondent and the person or persons alleged in the complaint ot be aggrieved an order dismissing the complaint.

"(i) After a charge has been filed and until the record has been filed in court as hereinafter provided, the proceeding may at any time be ended by agreement between the Commission and the respondent for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment practice and the Commission may at any time, upon reasonable notice, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it. An agreement approved by the Commission shall be enforceable under subsections (l) through (n) and the provisions of these subsections shall be applicable to the extent appropriate to a proceeding to enforce an agreement.

"(j) Findings of fact and orders made or issued under subsections (h) or (i) of this section shall be determined on the record. Sections 554, 555, 556, and 557 of title 5 of the United States Code shall apply to such proceedings.

"(k) Any party aggrieved by a final order of the Commission granting or denying in whole or in part the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in any United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question is alleged to have occurred or in which such party resides or transacts business, or in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, by filing in such court within sixty days after the service of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission and to any other party to the proceeding before the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall file in the court the record in the proceeding as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of the petition the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to grant to the petitioner or any other party, including the Commission, such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such record a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, the order of the Commission and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed or modified. Any party to the proceeding before the Commission shall be permitted to intervene in the court of appeals. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order of the Commission. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its member, or agent shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon the filing of the record with it, the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States, as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

"(l) The Commission may petition any United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question occurred or in which the respondent resides or transacts business, for the enforcement of its order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, by filing in such court a written petition praying that its order be enforced and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order. The Commission shall file in court with its petition the record in the proceeding as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the parties to the proceeding before the Commission. Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein and shall have power to grant to the Commission, or any other party, such temporary relief, restraining order, or other order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such record a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside in whole or in part, the order of the Commission and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed or modified. Any party to the proceeding before the Commission shall be permitted to intervene in the court of appeals. No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its members, or agent shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. Upon the filing of the record with it the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. Petitions filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

"(m) If no petition for review, as provided in subsection (k), is filed within sixty days after service of the Commission's order, the Commission's findings of fact and order shall be conclusive in connection with any petition for enforcement which is filed by the Commission under subsection (l) after the expiration of such sixty-day period. The clerk of the court of appeals in which such petition for enforcement is filed shall forthwith enter a decree enforcing the order of the Commission and shall transmit a copy of such decree to the Commission, the respondent named in the petition, and to any other parties to the proceeding before the Commission.

"(n) If within ninety days after service of the Commission's order, no petition for review has been filed as provided in subsection (k), and the Commission has not sought enforcement of its order as provided in subsection (l), any person entitled to relief under the Commission's order may petition for a decree enforcing the order in the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the unlawful employment practice in question occurred, or in which a respondent named in the order resides or transacts business. The provisions of subsection (m) shall apply to such petitions for enforcement.

"(o) The Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by attorneys appointed by the Commission.

"(p) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve the power of the Commission to grant effective relief in the proceeding, the Commission shall, after it issues a complaint, bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending its final disposition of such charge, or until the filing of a petition under subsections (k), (l), (m), or (n) of this section, as the case may be, in the United States district court for any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful employment practice concerned is alleged to have been committed, or the judicial district in which the aggrieved person would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful employment practice, but, if the respondent is not found within any such judicial district, such an action may be brought in the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28, United States Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in all cases be considered a judicial district in which such an action might have been brought. Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such injunctive relief or temporary restraining order as it deems just and proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law. Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, except paragraph (a)(2) thereof, shall govern proceedings under this subsection.

"(q)(1) If a charge filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) is dismissed by the Commission, or if within one hundred and eighty days from the filing of such charge or the expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), whichever is later, the Commission has not issued a complaint under subsection (f), the Attorney General has not filed a civil action under subsection

(f), or the Commission has not entered into an agreement under subsection (f) or (i) to which the person aggrieved is a party, the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and within sixty days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by an officer or employee of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon the commencement of such civil action, the Commission, or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, shall take no further action with respect thereto, except that, upon timely application, the court in its discretion may permit the Commission, or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, to intervene in such civil action if the Commission, or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending termination of State or local proceedin described in subsection (c) or (d) or the efforts of the Co mission to obtain voluntary compliance.

"(2) The right of an aggrieved person to bring a civ action under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall termina once the Commission has issued a complaint under subsectio (f) or the Attorney General has filed a civil action under sub section (f), or the Commission has entered into an agreemen under subsection (f) or (i) to which the person aggrieved i a party, except that (1) if after issuing a complaint the Com mission enters into an agreement under subsection (i) witho the agreement of the person aggrieved, or has not issued a order under subsection (h) within a period of one hundre and eighty days of the issuance of the complaint, the Com mission shall so notify the person aggrieved and a civil actio may be brought against the respondent named in the charg at any time prior to the Commission's issuance of an orde under subsection (h) or, in the case of an agreement unde subsection (i) to which the person aggrieved is not a party within sixty days after receiving notice thereof from the Com mission, and (2) where there has been no agreement unde subsection (i), if the person aggrieved files a civil actio against the respondent during the period from one hundred and eighty days to one year after the issuance of the com plaint such person shall notify the Commission of such actio and the Commission may petition the court not to proceed with the suit. The court may dismiss or stay any such action upon a showing that the Commission has been acting with due diligence on the complaint, that the Commission anticipates the issuance of an order under subsection (h) within a reasonable period of time, that the case is exceptional, and that extension of the Commission's jurisdiction is warranted."

(b) Subsections (f) through (k) of section 706 of such Act and references thereto are redesignated as subsections (r) through (w), respectively.

(c) Section 706(r) of such Act, as redesignated by this section, is amended by adding at the end the following sentence: "Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper."

(d) Subsections (u) and (v) of section 706 of such Act, as redesignated by this section, are amended (1) by striking out "(e)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(q)", and (2) by striking out "(i)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(u)".

SEC. 5. Section 707 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Effective two years after the date of enactment of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, the functions of the Attorney General under this section shall be transferred to the Commission, toge with such personnel, property, records, and unexpe balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds ployed, used, held, available, or to be made availabl connection with such functions unless the President subm and neither House of Congress vetoes, a reorganization p pursuant to chapter 9, of title 5, United States Code, inc sistent with the provisions of this subsection. The Commiss shall carry out such functions in accordance with the p visions of subsection (d) and (e) of this section.

"(d) Upon the transfer of functions provided for subsection (c) of this section, in all suits commenced pursu to this section prior to the date of such transfer, proceedi shall continue without abatement, all court orders and d crees shall remain in effect, and the Commission shall substituted as a party for the United States of America, t Attorney General, or the Acting Attorney General, a appropriate.

"(e) Subsequent to the date of enactment of the Equ
Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, th Commission shall have authority to investigate and act o
a charge of a pattern or practice of discrimination, whethe filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved or by an officer or employee of the Commission. All such actions shall be conducted in accordance with the procedures set forth in section 706, including the provisions for enforcement and appellate review contained in subsections (k), (l), (m), and (n) thereof."

SEC. 6. (a) Subsections (b), (c), and (d) of section 709 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 263; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–8(b)–(d)) are amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Commission may cooperate with State and local agencies charged with the administration of State fair employment practices laws and, with the consent of such agencies, may, for the purpose of carrying out its functions and duties under this title and within the limitation of funds appropriated specifically for such purpose, engage in and contribute to the cost of research and other projects of mutual interest undertaken by such agencies, and utilize the services of such agencies and their employees, and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, pay by advance or reimbursement such agencies and their employees for services rendered to assist the Commission in carrying out this title. In furtherance of such cooperative efforts, the Commission may enter into written agreements with such State or local agencies and such agreements may include provisions under which the Commission shall refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases specified in such agreements or under which the Commission shall relieve any person or class of persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed under this section. The Commission shall rescind any such agreement whenever it determines that the agreement no longer serves the interes of effective enforcement of this title.

"(c) Every employer, employment agency, and labo organization subject to this title shall (1) make and kee such records relevant to the determinations of whether unlawful employment practices have been or are being committed, (2) preserve such records for such periods, and (3) make such reports therefrom as the Commission shall prescribe by regulation or order, after public hearing, as reasonable, necessary, or appropriate for the enforcement of this title or the regulations or orders thereunder. The Commission shall, by regulation, require each employer, labor organization, and joint labor-management committee subject to this title which controls an apprenticeship or other training program to maintain such records as are reasonably necessary to carry out the purposes of this title, including, but not limited to, a list of applicants who wish to participate in such program, including the chronological order in which applications were received, and to furnish to the Commission upon request, a detailed description of the manner in which persons are selected to participate in the apprenticeship or other training program. Any employer, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee which believes that the application to it of any regulation or order issued under this section would result in undue hardship may apply to the Commission for an exemption from the application of such regulation or order, and, if such application for an exemption is denied, bring a civil action in the United States district court for the district where such records are kept. If the Commission or the court, as the case may be, finds that the application of the regulation or order to the employer, employment agency, or labor organization in question would impose an undue hardship, the Commission or the court, as the case may be, may grant appropriate relief. If any person required to comply with the provisions of this subsection fails or refuses to do so, the United States district court for the district in which such person is found, resides, or transacts business, shall, upon application of the Commission, or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency or political subdivision, have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring him to comply.

"(d) In prescribing requirements pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, the Commission shall consult with other interested State and Federal agencies and shall endeavor to coordinate its requirements with those adopted by such agencies. The Commission shall furnish upon request and without cost to any State or local agency charged with the administration of a fair employment practice law infor mation obtained pursuant to subsection (c) of this sectio from any employer, employment agency, labor organizatio or joint labor-management committee subject to the jurisdi tion of such agency. Such information shall be furnished o condition that it not be made public by the recipient agenc prior to the institution of a proceeding under State or loca law involving such information. If this condition is violate by a recipient agency, the Commission may decline to hono subsequent requests pursuant to this subsection."

(b) Section 709 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is amended by: (1) redesignating subsection (e) or subsection (f) and (2) by adding immediately after section 709(d) as amended, the following subsection (e):

"(e) Any record or paper required by section 709(c) of this title to be preserved or maintained shall be made available for inspection, reproduction, and copying by the Commission or its representative, or by the Attorney General or his representative, upon demand in writing directed to the person having custody, possession, or control of such record or paper. Unless otherwise ordered by a court of the United States, neither the members of the Commission or its representative nor the Attorney General or his representative shall disclose any record or paper produced pursuant to this title, or any reproduction or copy, except to Congress or any committee thereof, or to a governmental agency, or in the presentation of any case or proceeding before any court or grand jury. The United States district court for the district in which a demand is made or in which a record or paper so demanded is located, shall have jurisdiction to compel by appropriate process the production of such record or paper."

SEC. 7. Section 710 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 264; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–9) is amended to read as follows:

"INVESTIGATORY POWERS

"SEC. 710. For the purpose of all hearings and investigations conducted by the Commission or its duly authorized agents or agencies, section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (49 Stat. 455; 29 U.S.C. 161) shall apply. No subpoena shall be issued on the application of any party to proceedings before the Commission until after the Commission has issued and caused to be served upon the respondent a complaint and notice of hearing under subsection (f) of section 706."

SEC. 8. (a) Section 703(a)(2) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 255; 42 U.S.C. 2000e–2(a)(2)) is amended by inserting the words "or applicants for employment" after the words "his employees".

(c)(1) Section 704(a) of such Act is amended by inserting "or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs," after "employment agency" in section 704(a).

(2) Section 704(b) of such Act is amended by (A) striking out "or employment agency" and inserting in lieu thereof "employment agency, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs.", and (B) inserting a comma and the words "or relating to admission to, or employment in, any program established to provide apprenticeship or other training by such a joint labor-management committee" before the word "indicating".

(d) Section 705(a) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (785 Stat. 258, 42 U.S.C. 2000e–4(a)) is amended to read as follows:

*"SEC. 705. (a) There is hereby created a Commission to be known as the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which shall be composed of five members, unless additional members are appointed as hereinafter provided in this subsection. Not more than the least number of members sufficient to constitute a majority of the members of the Commission shall be members of the same political party. Members of the Commission shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Any individual chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed, and all members of the Commission shall continue to serve until their successors are appointed and qualified, except that no such members of the Commission shall continue to serve (1) for more than sixty days when the Congress is in session unless a nomination to fill such vacancy shall have been submitted to the Senate, or (2) after the adjournment sine die of the session of the Senate in which such nomination was submitted. The President shall designate one member to serve as Chairman of the Commission, and one member to serve as Vice Chairman. The Chairman shall be responsible on behalf of the Commission for the administrative operations of the Commission, and shall appoint, in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, such officers, agents, attorneys, hearing examiners, and employees as he deems necessary to assist it in the performance of its functions and to fix their compensation in accordance with the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates: Provided, That assignment, removal, and compensation of hearing examiners shall be in accordance with sections 3105, 3344, 5362, and 7521 of title 5, United States Code. At any time after one year from the effective date of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, the Chairman of the Commission, if he determines that the appointment of additional members of the Commission would help to effectuate the purposes of this title, may request the President to appoint up to four additional members of the Commission. Upon receiving such a request, the President may appoint up to four additional members of the Commission by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Such additional members shall be appointed for a term of five years. Upon the expiration of the term of appointment of any such additional member no further appointment to the same position shall be made and the total number of members of the Commission shall be reduced accordingly unless the Chairman of the Commission determines that the appointment of one or more additional members of the Commission continues to be necessary to better effectuate the purposes of this title and so advises the President."

(c) Section 705(g)(1) of such Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: ", and to accept voluntary and uncompensated services, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3679(b) of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 665(b))".

(f) Section 705(g)(6) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to intervene in a civil action brought by an aggrieved party under section 706."

(g) Section 713 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c) Except for the powers granted to the Commission under subsection (h) of section 706, the power to modify or set aside its findings, or make new findings, under subsections (i), (k), and (l) of section 706, the rulemaking power as defined in subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, with reference to general rules as distinguished from rules of specific applicability, and the power to enter into or rescind agreements with State and local agencies, as provided in subsection (b) of section 709, under which the Commission agrees to refrain from processing a charge in any cases or class of cases or under which the Commission agrees to relieve any person or class of persons in such State or locality from requirements imposed by section 709, the Commission may delegate any of its functions, duties, and powers to such person or persons as the Commission may designate by regulation, including functions, duties, and powers with respect to hearing, determining, ordering, certifying, reporting or otherwise acting as to any work, business, o matter. Nothing in this subsection authorizes the Commissio to provide for persons other than those referred to in claus (2) and (3) of subsection (b) of section 556 of title 5 o the United States Code to conduct any hearing to whic that section applies.

"(d) The Commission is authorized to delegate to an group of three or more members of the Commission any o all of the powers which it may itself exercise."

(h) Section 714 of such Act is amended by striking ou "section 111" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 111 and 1114".

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

OCTOBER 28, 1971.—Ordered to be printed

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfa submitted the following REPORT

together with

INDIVIDUAL AND SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS

[To accompany S. 2515]

The Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, to which was refe the bill (S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportu for American workers, having considered the same, reports favo thereon with an amendment (in the nature of a substitute) and re mends that the bill as amended do pass.

SUMMARY

The principal purpose of S. 2515 is to amend title VII of the Rights Act of 1964 to provide the Equal Employment Opport Commission with a method for enforcing the rights of those wo who have been subjected to unlawful employment practices.

The enforcement procedures provided for in S. 2515 includ issuance of a complaint by the Commission after an investigation efforts to conciliate, followed by a full administrative hearing o record, the issuance of a cease and desist order by the Commissio an opportunity for review by an appropriate court of appeals.

The bill confers upon the Commission the authority to proceed pattern and practice cases of discrimination, and phases out the A ney General's existing authority in such cases over a 2-year p The Secretary of Labor's enforcement functions under Exec Order 11246 as amended relating to nondiscrimination in employ by Government contractors and Federally assisted construction tractors are transferred to the Commission.

addition, S. 2515 expands coverage of Title VII, from those em-ers and labor organizations having 25 or more employees or mem- to those having eight or more employees or members one year r the date of enactment. The bill also includes coverage of em-ees of State and local governments with a provision that com-nts involving these employees will be litigated by the Attorney eral in U.S. district courts, and eliminates the exemption for em-ees of educational institutions.

he Civil Service Commission is given expanded authority to elim-e discrimination in Federal employment, and individual Federal loyees are expressly granted a right of private action to obtain f from such discrimination.

he time limitations on filing charges are expanded from 90 to 180 for a direct charge to the Commission and from 210 to 300 days a charge which is first brought under a State or local law. Back awards are limited to two years prior to the date a charge is filed the Commission. The bill also authorize the appointment of up to additional members of the Commission.

a result of six years experience with title VII, and in order to mmodate the enforcement power provided for in this bill, a num-of administrative changes are contained in S. 2515. They include nded record-keeping requirements and subpoena power, authority he Commission to conduct its own litigation, and additional pro-ons for aggrieved persons.

BACKGROUND

uring the 90th Congress, a bill to provide the Equal Employment ortunity Commission with power to issue cease and desist orders, 465, was reported by the Committee on Labor and Public Wel- but was not acted upon by the Senate. A closely comparable ure, S. 2453, was reported by the Committee during the 91st Con-s, and was passed by the Senate on October 1, 1970, by a vote of 24. This measure was not brought to a vote in the House of Rep-tatives, however.

September 14, 1971, a bill with similar cease and desist provi-, S. 2515, was introduced by Senator Byrd of West Virginia, for tor Williams and for 32 other Senators. Subsequently, on Septem-6, 1971, the House of Representatives passed H.R. 1746, a bill h would authorize the Equal Employment Opportunity Commis-to go into United States district courts on charges of discrimina-rather than to issue its own cease and desist orders. An identical o H.R. 1746, S. 2617, was introduced by Senator Dominick on ember 30, 1971.

ie Subcommittee on Labor held hearings on these three bills on ber 4, 6 and 7, 1971. S. 2515 was reported favorably by that Sub-mittee on October 14, 1971, and was considered by the full Com-ee on Labor and Public Welfare on October 19, 20, and 21, 1971, it was unanimously ordered reported to the Senate.

stimony was received from a number of Federal Government ials on these bills. The Chairman of the United States Commission ivil Rights, Reverend Theodore Hesburgh, testified in support of all of the provisions of S. 2515, including cease and desist enforcement powers, consolidation of Federal equal employment opportunity functions, and expansion of coverage to state and local government employees. William Brown III, Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission testified in support of S. 2515's cease and desist authority with the reservation that it should also contain court enforcement for pending cases. He endorsed expanded coverage, although he was not in favor of consolidation of EEOC functions. David Norman, Assistant Attorney General, Civil Rights Division, Department of Justice testified in support of a court enforcement approach and against consolidation of functions. Laurence Silberman, Under Secretary of Labor testified against the transfer of the Executive Order program to the Commission, and Irving Kator, Assistant Executive Director of the Civil Service Commission presented testimony in opposition to the transfer of that Commission's equal employment opportunity functions to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

29 O - 72 - 28

Congressman Erlenborn of Illinois testified in behalf of a court enforcement approach and Congressman Walter Fauntroy testified on behalf of transferring the Civil Service equal employment opportunity functions to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Clarence Mitchell of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and the NAACP, Ken Meiklejohn on behalf of the AFL–CIO, Jack Greenberg of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund., Inc., Joseph Rauh of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, Lucille Shriver of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Olga Madar, Vice President, United Auto Workers, Esther Lawton and Daisy Fields of the Federally Employed Women and Doris Meissner of the National Women's Political Caucus testified in support of S. 2515, including its cease and desist enforcement functions, expanded coverage, and consolidation of functions.

Statements in support of S. 2515 were also received from: Donald E. Morrison, President, National Education Association; Reverend Dr. Ralph David Abernathy, President, Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Paul J. Minarchenko, Legislative Representative, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees—AFL–CIO; Hope Eastman, Acting Director, Washington Office, American Civil Liberties Union; William G. Lunsford, on behalf of Friends Committee on National Legislation; David A. Brody, Director, Washington Office, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith; National Council of Jewish Women; Ann Scott, Vice President—Legislation, The National Organization for Women; Mary Jean Collins Robson, President, Chicago Chapter, NOW; The League of Women Voters; Mrs. Sherman Ross, Chairman, Legislative Program Committee, American Association of University Women; Germaine Krettek, Director, American Library Association; Edward Taylor Anderson, Legislative Associate, Common Cause; and Julius W. Hobson, Washington, D.C.

Testimony in support of a court enforcement bill, S. 2617 or H.R. 1746, was also received from Gerard Smetana on behalf of the American Retail Federation and William Dunn on behalf of the Associated General Contractors. In addition, statements in support of those bills even years ago, in response to compelling national need and con-, Congress enacted Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 blic Law 88-352). By its action, Congress acknowledged the prev- ce of employment discrimination in the United States and the l for Federal legislation to deal with the problem of such discrimi- on. The Act also established the Equal Employment Opportunity mission (EEOC), whose operations were initiated on July 2, . It was the intention of Congress that the EEOC should be the nary Federal agency responsible for eliminating discriminatory loyment practices in the United States.

uring the 6 years since its inception, the EEOC has made an ic attempt to reduce the incidence of employment discrimination e Nation, and to ameliorate the conditions which have led to the stence of these practices. During this period, however, it has been nstrated that employment discrimination is even more pervasive tenacious than the Congress had assumed it to be at the time it d the Act. It affects employees in both the private and the public rs as well as those working in large and small establishments. It lso become clear that despite the national commitment of Con- to the goal of assuring equal employment opportunity for all our ns, the machinery created by the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is not l respects equal to that commitment.

e most striking deficiency of the 1964 Act is that the EEOC does ave the authority to issue judicially enforceable orders to back s findings of discrimination. In prohibiting discrimination in em- ment based on race, religion, color, sex or national origin, the Act limited the Commission's enforcement authority to "informal ods of conference, conciliation and persuasion."

a consequence, unless the Department of Justice concludes that ttern or practice of resistance to Title VII is involved, the burden btaining enforceable relief rests upon each individual victim of imination, who must go into court as a private party, with the and expense that entails, in order to secure the rights promised nder the law. Thus, those persons whose economic disadvantage a prime reason for enactment of equal employment opportunity isions find that their only recourse in the face of unyielding imination is one that is time consuming, burdensome, and all ften, financially prohibitive.

is failure to grant the EEOC meaningful enforcement powers proven to be a major flaw in the operation of Title VII. While tatutes dealing with discrimination in housing and in education ide appropriate enforcement powers for the agencies responsible he elimination of discrimination in those areas of the law, Title as it now stands, is little more than a declaration of national y. Regretably, the practices and policies of discrimination in em- ment are so deeply ingrained that the voluntary conciliation ap- h has not succeeded in adequately combating the existence of practices.

In 1964, employment discrimination tended to be viewed as a ser of isolated and distinguishable events, for the most part due ill-will on the part of some identifiable individual or organization, was thought that a scheme that stressed conciliation rather than co pulsory processes would be most appropriate for the resolution of t essentially "human" problem, and that litigation would be necessa only on an occasional basis. Experience has shown this view to be fal

Employment discrimination as viewed today is a far more compl and pervasive phenomenon. Experts familiar with the subject n generally describe the problem in terms of "systems" and "effec rather than simply intentional wrongs, and the literature on the su ject is replete with discussions of, for example, the mechanics seniority and lines of progression, perpetuation of the present effe of pre-act discriminatory practices through various institutional d vices, and testing and validation requirements.[1] In short, the proble is one whose resolution in many instances requires not only expe assistance, but also the technical perception that the problem exis in the first instance, and that the system complained of is unlawfu This kind of expertise normally is not found in either the personn or legal arms of corporations, and the result in terms of conciliatio is often an impasse, with the respondent unwilling or unable t understand the problem in the same way that the Commission pe ceives it.

The resulting impasse between EEOC and the employer has playe a large part in the present failure of Title VII. The employer realiz that any attack on its policies by the EEOC presents largely an in effectual threat. To comply with the Commission's interpretation of problem, and to accord the appropriate relief, is a purely voluntar matter with the respondent with no direct legal sanctions available t EEOC. This absolute discretion available to respondents has no proven conducive to the success of Title VII objectives. In cases posin the most profound consequences, respondents have frequently ignore the EEOC's findings, preferring rather to chance the unlikelihood tha the complainant will pursue his claim further through the costly an time-consuming process of court enforcement. The social consequence have been extreme.

The failure of the voluntary conciliation approach is reflected i the present EEOC workload statistics presented by its Chairman William H. Brown, III. Since its inception, the Commission has re ceived 81,000 charges. Of this number, the Commission has been abl to achieve a totally, or even partially satisfactory conciliation in les than half. This means that in a significant number of cases the ag grieved individual was not able to achieve any satisfactory settlement of his claim through the EEOC, and was forced to either give up his or her claim or, if the necessary funds and time were available, t pursue the case through the Federal courts.

hile the above-noted number of charges is disturbing by its very it becomes even more significant when considered in light of the that each year the number of charges filed with the Commission inues to increase. For example, in FY 1970, 14,129 charges were with EEOC; in FY 1971, this number increased to 22,920 ges; and current estimates submitted by the Commission in- te that more than 32,000 charges will be filed this year. It is ob- s that without effective enforcement powers, the EEOC will be little more than a receptacle for charges of violations of Title and that an ever-increasing number of aggrieved individuals will ft without an adequate remedy for violations which are clearly ibited by the law.

he impact of this inability to obtain relief from employment dis- ination surfaces in another, more indicative set of facts—the eco- c disparities which presently affect this Nation's minorities and en.

a special report released this year by the Bureau of the Census, Social and Economic Status of Negroes in the United States," vidence is clear that while some progress has been made toward ring the economic position of the Nation's black population, the ed goal of social and economic equality is not yet anywhere near lity. For example, the report shows that the median family in- for Negroes in 1970 was $6,279, while the median income for es during the same period was $10,236. This earnings gap shows Negroes are still far from reaching their rightful place in ty.

pport for the above statement is provided by statistics in the us Bureau report which show that Negroes are concentrated in the r-paying, less prestigious positions in industry and are largely pre- d from advancement to the higher paid, more prestigious posi- . For example, while Negroes constitute about 10% of the labor , they account for only 3% of all jobs in the high-paying profes- l, technical, and managerial positions. In the nine industries with ighest earning capabilities (printing and publishing, chemicals, ary metals, fabricated metals, nonelectrical machinery, transpor- n equipment, air transportation, and instruments manufacture), oes hold only 1% of professional and managerial positions. On the hand, in the lowest paying laborer and service worker categories, oes account for 24% of all jobs.

is economic disparity is further reinforced by statistics which that the unemployment rate for Negroes is considerably higher that for whites. Figures available for 1970 show that while 4.0% hite males were unemployed, and the unemployment rate for all s was 5.4%, 9.3% of all Negroes were unemployed. Even in the gerial and professional positions, the area with the lowest unem- ment rate, Negro unemployment was 2.1% while white unemploy- was 1.7%.

ile statistics on Spanish-speaking Americans are not nearly as nt or as complete, available data indicates that this, the second- st ethnic minority group in the Nation, with approximately 7.5 n members, is in a similar situation. In 1969, the median family e for Spanish-speaking American families was $5,641. About of these families had incomes of less than $3,000. Both male and female Spanish-speaking workers, as has already been shown to be t case with Negroes, are also concentrated in the lower-paying occup tions. Only 25% of employed Spanish-speaking males are in whi collar jobs, compared to 41% of men for all other origins. On the oth hand, 58.8% of Spanish-speaking males are concentrated in blue-coll occupations. The statistics for Spanish-speaking women workers i dicates a similar disparate distribution. Also, as with Negroes, Spanis speaking workers suffer a higher unemployment rate when compar to the white population. In 1969, 6.0% of Spanish-speaking America were unemployed, compared to 3.5% for the rest of the Nation.

The situation for working women is no less serious. The dispara treatment of women in this country has been shown in a series studies undertaken by the Women's Bureau of the U.S. Departme of Labor.[2] These studies show that there are aproximately 30 milli employed women in the Nation, constituting about 38% of the to work force. The number of working women has also increased ve rapidly during the last two decades—between 1947 and 1968 the nu ber of women in the civilian labor force increased by 75% while t number of men during the same period increased only 16%. Despi this large increase in the numbers of women in the work force, wom continue to be relegated to low paying positions and are precluded fr high-paying executive positions. Similarly, the rate of advanceme for women is slower than for men in similar positions.

Information supplied by the U.S. Department of Labor's Wome Bureau shows that 70% of all employed women work in order to pr vide primary support for themselves or to provide a supplement the incomes of their husbands which may be needed to meet housho expenses. However, within established occupational categories, wom are paid less for doing the same jobs as are done by men. For examp in 1968, the latest year for which extensive data is presently availab the median salary for all scientists was $13,200; for women scientis the median saary was $10,000. Similarly, the median salary for a fu time male factory worker was $6,738 while his female counterpa could only expect to earn $3,991. This economic disparity is further e phasized by figures which show that 60% of women but only 20% men earned less than $5,000 per year, while only 3% of women b 28% of men earned $10,000 per year or more.

While some have looked at the entire issue of women's rights as frivolous divertissement, this Committee believes that discriminati against women is no less serious than other prohibited forms of di crimination, and that it is to be accorded the same degree of concer given to any type of similarly unlawful conduct. As a further poi recent studies have shown that there is a close correlation between di crimination based on sex and racial discrimination, and that bo possess similar characteristics.[3] Both categories involve large, natur classes, membership in which is beyond the individual's control; bo olve highly visible characteristics on which it has been easy to draw s, stereotypical distinctions. The arguments justifying different tment of the sexes were also historically used to justify different tment of the races.

While it is true that the extreme aspects of sex-discrimination as it ted in the early part of the twentieth century have been dispelled, women have now been granted the right to vote and may serve on es, their status in employment is still subject to blatant discrimina-
. In a series of decisions in recent years, the courts have voided loyment practices and policies which discriminate on the basis of and have, accordingly, set the necessary legal precedents for deal-with this form of discrimination.[1] However, despite the effort by courts and EEOC, discrimination against women continues to widespread; and is regarded by many as either morally or iologically justifiable.

he Committee realizes that enactment of this bill will not auto-cally end employment discrimination in this country. The bill s no panaceas or guarantees of success. Despite several aspects of peration of Title VII during these last 6 years which reflect major ncements in securing equal employment opportunity for all Amers, the results are, nonetheless, disappointing in terms of what orities and women have a right to expect under the provisions of law. Particularly disillusioning has been the Congressional estab-ent of the EEOC without adequate enforcement; it has, in most cts, proved to be a cruel joke to those complainants who have in faith turned to the Federal government with the complaint of dis-ination only to find, after a lengthy investigatory and conciliatory ess, that the Government cannot compel compliance.

he accomplishment of Congress in enacting the Civil Rights Act 64 is further dimmed by the fact that this is the fourth effort since time to enact suitable enforcement legislation. The time has come Congress to correct the defects in its own legislation. The promises ual job opportunity made in 1964 must be made realities in 1971.

Major Provisions of the Bill

CHANGES IN COVERAGE UNDER TITLE VII

e bill expands the coverage of Title VII in the following cts:

Eight or more employees.—Section 701 of the Act (section 2 of the is amended to expand the coverage of title VII to include em-rs of eight or more persons, and labor organizations with eight ore members. The Committee agrees with the Chairman of EEOC discrimination should be attacked wherever it exists, and recog-that small establishments have frequently been the most flagrant tors of equal employment opportunity.

present, the jurisdiction of the EEOC extends to approximately of the nation's non-agricultural work force (approximately 250,- mployers and 37,800 labor organizations). By adding the provisions as currently proposed, the jurisdiction of the EEOC wo encompass another 8% of the present work force, or approximat 6.5 million employees and about 90,000 employers.

The need for coverage in this area is obvious. The absence of EE jurisdiction over these small employers and labor organizations made it impossible for the Commission to compile sufficient inform tion in this area to pinpoint those areas where patterns or practices discrimination exist. As a consequence, it has not been possible to ins tute changes where necessary to insure compliance with the provisi of Title VII.

The Committee is not persuaded by arguments that the increas coverage will inundate EEOC with complaints and paperwork. the first instance, the proposition that the increased coverage w overwhelm the Commission with an unmanageable number of n cases is not convincing. This argument, which has traditionally be presented whenever a new jurisdictional area is opened up, has prov to be largely false in other areas of expanded Federal jurisdicti Also, it must be noted that although the proposed increase will res in coverage of more employers, these employers represent proportio ately fewer employees, therefore mitigating against any massive i flux of cases. The argument that the Commission will be overburden by additional paperwork is similarly alarmist. All EEOC reporti procedures are now fully computerized, and once the initial repr gramming is accomplished to account for the new coverage, the Co mittee believes that any additional burden will not be noticeable.

However, since the Commission will be undertaking several n areas of responsibility under the proposed legislation, the Committ recognizes that the Commission may have some difficulty in handli the increased caseload immediately. Therefore, the bill provides th the expansion take place one year after enactment of the bill.

2. State and local governments.—The bill would amend section 7 of the Act (section 2 of the bill) to broaden the jurisdictional cove age of title VII by deleting the existing exemptions for State and lo government employees. The Attorney General is given the author to bring civil actions involving unlawful employment practices co mitted by State and local governmental agencies.

The Committee believes that employees of State and local gover ments are entitled to the same benefits and protections in equal e ployment as the employees in the private sector of the economy.

There are at present approximately 10.1 million persons employed State and local governmental units. This figure represents an increa of over 2 million since 1964, and all indications are that the numb of State and local employees will continue to increase more rapidly du ing the next few years. Few of these employees, however, are afford the protection of an effective Federal forum for assuring equal e ployment opportunity. By amending the present section 701 to inclu State and local governmental units within the definition of an "em ployer" under Title VII, all State and local governmental employe would, under the provisions of the bill, have access to the remedi available under the Act.

report released in 1969 by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, All the People * * * By All the People," that Commission con- that:

> * * * State and local governments have failed to fulfill eir obligation to assure equal job opportunity * * * Not ly do State and local governments consciously and overtly scriminate in hiring and promoting minority group mem- rs, but they do not foster positive programs to deal with scriminatory treatment on the job.

eport's findings indicate that the existence of discrimination is uated by both institutional and overt discriminatory practices, at past discriminatory practices are maintained through de facto ated job ladders, invalid selection techniques, and stereotypical ceptions by supervisors regarding minority group capabilities. udy also indicates that employment discrimination in State and overnments is more pervasive than in the private sector.

nother report issued by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in Mexican Americans and the Administration of Justice in the vest," the Commission found that in the five Southwestern vith the highest concentration of Spanish-speaking Americans, epresentation in the vital area of law enforcement was signifi- disproportionate to their demographic distribution. The report hat in these five Southwestern states, Spanish-speaking Amer- who constitute approximately 12% of the population account for 2% of police officers and 6.11% of civilian employees associated w enforcement agencies.

failure of State and local governmental agencies to accord equal ment opportunities is particularly distressing in light of the ance that these agencies play in the daily lives of the average From local law enforcement to social services, each citizen in a nity is in constant contact with many local agencies. The impor- f equal opportunity in these agencies is, therefore, self-evident. democratic society, participatory government is a cornerstone l government. Discrimination by government therefore serves a destructive purpose. The exclusion of minorities from effective pation in the bureaucracy not only promotes ignorance of minor- blems in that particular community, but also creates mistrust, ion, and all too often hostility toward the entire process of ment.

Constitution is imperative in its prohibition of discrimination e and local governments. The Fourteenth Amendment guaran- al treatment of all citizens by States and their political subdi- and the Supreme Court has reinforced this directive by hold- t State action which denies equal protection of the laws to any even if only indirectly, is in violation of the Fourteenth ment.[5] It is clear that the guarantee of equal protection so extend to such direct action as discriminatory employment es.

Committee believes that it is an injustice to provide employees private sector with the assistance of an agency of the Federal Government in redressing their grievances while at the same time den ing assistance similar to State and local government employees. T last sentence of the Fourteenth Amendment, enabling Congr to enforce the Amendment's guarantees by appropriate legislati is frequently overlooked, and the plain meaning of the Consti tion allowed to lapse. The inclusion of State and local government em ployees within the jurisdiction of Title VII guarantees and prote tions will fulfill the Congressional duty to enact the "appropria legislation" to insure that all citizens are treated equally in th country.

The Supreme Court has further indicated that at least part of t extension of jurisdiction as contemplated by S. 2515 is a proper cons tutional exercise of power under the Commerce Clause. In its decisi in Maryland v. Wirtz, 392 U.S. 183 (1968), the Court upheld the exte sion of the Fair Labor Standards Act to certain classes of public em ployees as a legitimate exercise of congressional regulatory author under the Commerce Clause. The Court rejected the argument th Federal regulation of the employment practices of State and lo governments is an improper infringement upon the sovereignty of t States. Pointing out that the activities of State and local governme can affect commerce, it held:

> If a State is engaging in economic activities that are validly regulated by the Federal Government when engaged in by private persons, the State too may be forced to conform its activities to Federal regulation.[6]

A question was raised in the Committee concerning the applicati of Title VII in the case of a Governor whose cabinet appointees a close personal aides are drawn from one political party. The Co mittee's intention is that nothing in this bill should be interpreted prohibit such appointments unless they are based on discriminato because of race, color, religion, sex or national origin. That intent is reflected in sections 703(h) and 706(w) of the law.

3. Employees of educational institutions.—The existing exempti for employees of educational institutions is eliminated by an amen ment to section 702 (sec. 3 of the bill).

There are at present over 120,000 educational institutions, wi approximately 2.8 million teachers and professional staff me bers and another 1.5 million non-professional staff members. Y all of these employees are, in effect, without an effective Federal re edy in the area of employment discrimination.

The presence of discrimination in the Nation's educational insti tions is no secret. Many of the most famous and best remembered ci rights cases have involved discrimination in education. This discri nation, however, is not limited to the students alone. Discriminato practices against faculty, staff, and other employees is also comm The practices complained of parallel the same kinds of illegal actio which are encountered in other sectors of business, and include illeg n other areas of employment, statistics for educational institu-ndicate that minorities and women are precluded from the more ious and higher-paying positions, and are relegated to the more and lower-paying jobs. While in elementary and secondary systems Negroes accounted for approximately 10% of the total r of positior , in the higher-paying and more prestigious posi-n institutions of higher learning, blacks constituted only 2.2% of itions, most of these being found in all-black or predominantly institutions. Women are similarly subject to discriminatory pat-Not only are they generally under-represented in institutions of learning, but those few that do obtain positions are generally teachers, out of 778,000 elementary and secondary school prin-

Committee believes that it is essential that these employees be he same opportunity to redress their grievances as are available r employees in the other sectors of business. Accordingly, the ittee has concluded that educational institutions, like other ems in the Nation, should report their activities to the Commission ould be subject to the Act. There is nothing in the legislative ound of Title VII, nor does any national policy suggest itself, ort the present exemption. In fact, the Committee believes that stence of discrimination in educational institutions is particu-ritical. It is difficult to imagine a more sensitive area than educa-nstitutions, where the youth of the Nation are exposed to a mul-of ideas and impressions that will strongly influence their future oment. To permit discrimination here would, more than in any rea, tend to promote existing misconceptions and stereotypical izations which in turn would lead to future patterns of ination.

cially recognized long before the enactment of the Civil Rights A of 1964.[8] Congress itself has specifically provided for nondiscrimin tion in the Federal government by stating that it is "the policy of t United States to insure equal employment opportunities for Feder employees without discrimination because of race, color, religion, se or national origin . . ." (5 U.S.C. § 7151). The primary responsibili for implementing this stated National objective has been granted to t Civil Service Commision pursuant to Executive Order 11246 (196 and more recently by Executive Order 11478 (1969). In his memora dum accompanying Executive Order 11478, President Nixon stat that "discrimination of any kind based on factors not relevant job performance must be eradicated completely from Feder employment." This was an important step forward in the field equal employment opportunity for Federal employees.

Progress has been made in this field, however, much remains to done. Statistical evidence shows that minorities and women contin to be denied access to a large number of government jobs, particular in the higher grade levels. The disparity can be clearly seen in figu presented in a recent report released by the Civil Service Commissio Minority Group Employment in the Federal Government (1970). O the basis of the figures presented therein, the following listing sho the percentage of minority group employees under the General Sche ule by grade level:

	Negro	Spanish-surnamed	American Indian	Ore
GS–1 through GS–4	21.8	3.0	1.8
GS–5 through GS–8	13.5	2.2	.7
GS–9 through GS–11	5.1	1.5	.5
GS–12 through GS–13	2.7	.8	.2
GS–14 through GS–15	1.7	.7	.2
GS–16 through GS–18	1.4	.3	.1

Minorities represent 19.4% of the total employment in the Feder government (15.0% are Negroes, 2.9% are Spanish-surnamed, 0.7 are American Indians, and 0.8% are Oriental). Their concentrati in the lower grade levels indicates that their ability to advance to t higher levels has been restricted.

In many areas, the pattern at regional levels is worse than t national pattern. For example, the committee notes with special co cern the particularly low percentage of Federal jobs held by Spanis surnamed persons in areas of high residential concentration of su persons, particularly in California and the Southwestern States, a expects the Commission to undertake a special study of this proble to develop programs to provide greater entry level and advancem employment opportunities for Spanish-surnamed persons.

The position of women in the Federal government has not fa any better. In testimony before the Senate Labor Subcommittee th year, Mrs. Daisy B. Fields, past president of Federally Employe Women (FEW), testified as to the distribution, by percent, of a women employed by the Federal government (approximately 665,0 or about 34%) as represented by the following breakdown:

inordinate concentration of women in the lower grade levels, eir conspicuous absence from the higher grades is again evident. feature of the present equal employment opportunity program deserves special scrutiny by the Civil Service Commission is the aint process. The procedure under the present system, intended to le for the informal disposition of complaints, may have denied yees adequate opportunity for impartial investigation and reso- of complaints.

der present procedures, in most cases, each agency is still respon- or investigating and judging itself. Although provision is made e appointment of an outside examiner, the examiner does not he authority to conduct an independent investigation, and his sions and findings are in the nature of recommendations to the y head who makes the final agency determination on whether s, in fact, discrimination in that particular case. testimony before the Labor Subcommittee reflected a general f confidence in the effectiveness of the complaint procedure on rt of Federal employees. Complaints have indicated skepticism ing the Commission's record in obtaining just resolutions of aints and adequate remedies. This has, in turn, discouraged per- rom filing complaints with the Commission for fear that doing only result in antagonizing their supervisors and impairing ture hope of advancement. The new authority given to the Civil e Commission in the bill is intended to enable the Commission to ider its entire complaint structure and the relationships between ployee, agency and Commission in these cases.

ther task for the Civil Service Commission is to develop more ise in recognizing and isolating the various forms of discrimina- hich exist in the system it administers. The Commission should ecially careful to ensure that its directives issued to Federal es address themselves to the various forms of systemic discrimi- in the system. The Commission should not assume that employ- discrimination in the Federal Government is solely a matter of ous intent on the part of individuals. It apparently has not recognized that the general rules and procedures that it has lgated may in themselves constitute systemic barriers to minori- d women. Civil Service selection and promotion techniques and ements are replete with artificial requirements that place a m on "paper" credentials. Similar requirements in the private of business have often proven of questionable value in predict- performance and have often resulted in perpetuating existing s of discrimination (see e.g. Griggs v. Duke Power Co., supra he inevitable consequence of this kind of a technique in Feder- loyment, as it has been in the private sector, is that classes of s who are socio-economically or educationally disadvantaged a very heavy burden in trying to meet such artificial qualificain these and other areas where discrimination is institutional, than merely a matter of bad faith, that corrective measures to be urgently required. For example, the Committee expects vil Service Commission to undertake a thorough re-examination of its entire testing and qualification program to ensure that standards enunciated in the Griggs case are fully met.

The Civil Service Commission's primary responsibility over personnel matters in the Government does create a built-in conf of interest for examining the Government's equal employment opp tunity program for structural defects which may result in a lack true equal employment opportunity. Yet, the Committee was p suaded that the Civil Service Commission is sincere in its dedicat to the principles of equal employment opportunity enunciated Executive Order 11478 and that the Commission has the will and sire to overcome any such conflict of interest. In order to assist Commission in accomplishing its goals and to make clear the C gressional expectation that the Commission will take those furt steps which are necessary in order to satisfy the goals of Execut Order 11478, the Committee adopted in Section 707(b) of the specific requirements under which the Commission is to function developing a comprehensive equal employment opportunity progr

Thus the provision in section 717(b) for applying "appropr remedies" is intended to strengthen the enforcement powers of the C Service Commission by providing statutory authority and support ordering whatever remedies or actions by Federal agencies are nece to ensure equal employment opportunity in Federal employment. Re edies may be applied as a result of individual allegations of discri ination, CSC investigation of equal employment opportunity pr grams in Federal agencies or their field installations, or fr review of agency plans of action and progress reports. Remedies m be in terms of action required to correct a situation regarding single employee or group of employees or broader management tion to correct systemic discrimination and to improve equal emple ment opportunity program effectiveness to bring about need progress. The Commission is to provide Federal agencies with nec sary guidance and authority to effectuate necessary remedies in dividual cases, including the award of back pay, reinstatement hiring, and immediate promotion where appropriate.

The bill also directs the Commission to require each Federal depar ment and agency (including appropriate units of the District Columbia Government) to prepare an equal employment opportuni affirmative plan of action at least annually. The Commission is review, modify, and approve each department or agency develop with full consideration of particular problems and employme opportunity needs of individual minority group populations with each geographic area. These legislative directions are, of course, intended to limit the Commission in requiring the establishment affirmative equal employment opportunity plans for any agency lev including local installations as needed; indeed, the Committee pects the Commission to require that agency plans include speci regional plans for particularly large Federal regional installatio and other regional offices with deficient records of progress in equ employment opportunity. The Committee recognizes that this n emphasis on regional installation equal employment opportuni and action plans will require a greater commitment of both agency a Civil Service Commission personnel to planning and enforcem activities and expects the Civil Service Commission to ensure th affing additions will be made both at the national and regional evels. Finally, to lend the greatest credibility to its equal em- ent opportunity efforts at a national and regional level, the ission should review and revise its own equal employment plan and implementation, particularly at its regional offices gher grade levels, to ensure that its own record in this field iplary and thus a model for all other Federal agencies.

bill requires the Commission to obtain, on at least a semi-annual ninority group employment and such other data as are neces- r effective evaluation by the Commission and the public of each ment's, agency's or unit's record of equal employment oppor- achievement and to publish at least semi-annually full statistical ier reports (comparable to the report now published annually) al employment opportunity progress. In evaluating agency or approval, the Commission is also directed to study and ine the appropriate allocation of personnel and resources com- to, and the qualifications to be established for top equal em- nt opportunity officials responsible for, carrying out program ibilities, including necessary affirmative action as well as pro- of individual discrimination cases, on both a central office and l (SMSA) basis.

Committee wishes to emphasize the significant reservoir of se developed by the EEOC with respect to dealing with prob- f discrimination. According, the committee strongly urges il Service Commission to take advantage of this knowledge and nce and to work closely with EEOC in the development and nance of its equal employment opportunity programs.

mportant adjunct to the strengthened Civil Service Commission ibilities is the statutory provision of a private right of action courts by Federal employees who are not satisfied with the or Commission decision.

estimony of the Civil Service Commission notwithstanding, the tee found that an aggrieved Federal employee does not have o the courts. In many cases, the employee must overcome a U.S. ment defense of sovereign immunity or failure to exhaust ad- ative remedies with no certainty as to the steps required to such remedies. Moreover, the remedial authority of the Com- and the courts has also been in doubt. The provisions adopted committee will enable the Commission to grant full relief to ed employees, or applicants, including back pay and immediate ement as appropriate. Aggrieved employees or applicants will ve the full rights available in the courts as are granted to in- ls in the private sector under title VII.

CHANGES IN ENFORCEMENT PROVISIONS

Section 4 of the bill revises section 706 of the act to enable the EEOC to process a charge of employment discrimination through the investigation, conciliation, administrative hearing, and judicial review stages.

The present act, which only allows the Commission to pursue charges through the informal methods of persuasion and conciliation, has, as already shown, proven to be seriously defective in providing an effective Federal remedy for violations of title VII. Since the compliance provisions of the present law, as regards the findings of the EEOC, are purely voluntary, and respondents have not generally been very agreeable to accepting EEOC decisions where discriminatory practices are found, the burden of relief has been placed upon the aggrieved individual's private right of action in the Federal courts.

This method has generally worked to the disadvantage of the aggrieved individuals. Since most title VII complainants are by the very nature of their complaint disadvantaged, the burden of going to court, initiating legal proceedings by retention of private counsel, and the attendant time delays and legal costs involved, have effectively precluded a very large percentage of valid title VII claims from ever being decided. This disparity between complainants and respondents in title VII litigation has been recognized by the courts which have characterized such litigation as a "modern day David and Goliath confrontation."[9] In such situations, the public has an overriding interest in protecting the individual from the denial of those rights which Congress has specifically provided.

To accomplish the stated purpose of title VII, the bill, while retaining the private right of action, provides, as well, for the elimination of unfair employment practices through a system of administrative hearings, Commission decisions and orders, and ultimate court review in appropriate cases—the method of enforcement which has long been utilized by other regulatory agencies.

The need to provide some form of direct enforcement power to the EEOC has been voiced since the inception of the Commission. There is disagreement whether this enforcement power should be through a Commission lawsuit in a U.S. district court, or by an administrative proceeding followed by a cease-and-desist order with review in the appropriate U.S. court of appeals.

The committee is unanimous in its view that some method of enforcement is required for title VII. An alternative measure providing for court enforcement for title VII, instead of the administrative cease-and desist procedure, was given full and careful consideration in the hearings and in the full committee. That measure, however, was rejected, and the bill with administrative cease-and desist procedure was adopted. Without exception, all spokesmen for the major civil groups strongly supported the cease-and-desist enforcement er Theodore Hesburgh, Chairman of the U.S. Commission on ights, testified that cease-and-desist authority is the most effec- l expeditious enforcement mechanism available for use against ment discrimination and that experience has demonstrated e existence of cease-and-desist authority encourages settlement plaints before the enforcement state is reached.

Committee was not persuaded that the direct court enforcement ue would be faster and more effective than traditional adminis- enforcement. The present—and ever increasing overcrowded— ds of the Federal courts is a well-known fact, and, as repeatedly sized by the Judicial Conference of the United States, measures parately needed to expedite trials and relieve the dockets of urts.

stics appearing in the 1970 Annual Report of the Director of ministrative Office of the U.S. Courts indicate that there were trials completed in the U.S. district courts in 1970, up 11 over 1969 and about 60 percent more than in 1962. There was of 127,240 civil and criminal cases on the dockets in 1970, and dictions where the caseloads are the heaviest, it is not uncom- several years to elapse before a matter is reached for trial.

Judicial Conference Report mentions specifically that civil ases have accounted for a good part of the overall growth in ngs. Between 1961 and 1970 there was an increase of more than rcent in civil rights cases filed and in the year 1970 itself, there 985 civil rights cases filed compared to 2,453 in 1969, an increase rcent.

otential for court backlog created by requiring these cases to be at the initial level in the district courts is clear from these s. Moreover, Chief Justice Burger called attention to the prob- overburdening the courts with new cases in his address to the an Bar Association in July of 1970 when he stated:

> From time to time Congress adds more judges, but the total icial organization never quite keeps up with the caseload o recent statutes alone added thousands of cases relating to mitment of narcotic addicts and the mentally ill. These ditions came when civil rights cases, the voting cases and soner petitions were expanding by the thousands.

praising the question of enforcement by district court trials han through agency hearings followed by appellate court re- he committee was thus particularly concerned with the acute of overcrowding of our trial court system. It recognized that t this additional caseload on the district courts would not only already overburdened trial dockets of the courts, but might lay the administration of justice on a national scale unprece- in our history. It is truly said that "Justice delayed is justice " Such is not our objective.

operations issues particularly in the fashioning of the remedies eliminating discrimination. The Equal Employment Opportu Commission would be expected to develop an important reservo expertise in these matters, expertise which would not readily be a able to a widespread court system. It is expected that through the ministrative process the Commission will continue to define and velop the approaches to handling serious problems of discrimina that are involved in the area of employment including testing labor relations (including seniority systems). It is incumbent u this administrative agency to develop the necessary expertise, ing ity, and sensitivity that will effectuate the purposes of Title VII, vide full relief to aggrieved persons, and still maintain an appropr understanding of the problems faced by the employment sector.

It should also be noted that the administrative cease-and-desist proach encourages early settlement of claims, thereby further al ating the courts and providing quick relief for aggrieved indivi For example, in the Summary of Operations by the General Co of the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) for fiscal year and the first 6 months of 1971, figures show that in fiscal year the NLRB received a record 33,581 cases. Of these, however, percent were dissposed of without the need for a formal hearing the 2,217 cases which were heard by hearing examiners, only 4.2 to be filed for review or enforcement in the courts of appeals, only about half of these were ever set for oral argument. Experi with other Federal agencies and State fair employment agencies cates a similar trend toward relatively few incidents of ac adjudication.

Further considerations weighing in favor of administrative ce and-desist powers are:

(1) This is the type of authority given to many other Federal re latory agencies.[10-11]

(2) It is the type of enforcement authority preferred by 32 of States which have equal employment opportunity laws.[12]

(3) It will insure more quickly a unified approach to the probl of discrimination since decisions would be rendered by one age rather than several hundred district court judges.

(4) It will provide the needed expertise in recognizing and s ing the more subtle, institutional forms of discrimination.

Following is a comparison of the procedures which are follo when a charge is filed with the Commisson under title VII in present form and those that would be followed under the bill:

issuance of a complaint, to seek preliminary or temporary relief Federal district court, pending the final disposition of the charge appeal to the court of appeals (sec. 706(p)).

The intent of section 706(p) is to incorporate existing law de oped in private actions and "pattern or practice" suits under title of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.[14-15] Courts have generally regar petitions for preliminary relief in such cases favorably, and h granted preliminary injunctions against the continuation of unla employment practices in situations which would normally cal such relief in proceedings under rule 65 of the Federal Rules of C Procedure.

The committee believes that in determining whether or not to i preliminary relief, the appropriate standard for the courts to ap was aptly stated by the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circui United States v. Hayes International Corp.:

> Where, as here, the statutory rights of employees are involved and an injunction is authorized by statute and the statutory conditions are satisfied as in the facts presented here, the usual prerequisite of irreparable injury need not be established and the agency to whom the enforcement of the right has been entrusted is not required to show irreparable injury before obtaining an injunction. Fleming v. Salem Box Co. 38 F. Supp. 997, 998–99 (D. Ore., 1940); Western Electric Co., Inc. v. Cinema Supplies, Inc., 80 F. 2d 106, cert. den. 297 U.S. 717. We take the position that in such a case, irreparable injury should be presumed from the very fact that the statute has been violated. Whenever a qualified Negro employee is discriminatorily denied a chance to fill a position for which he is qualified and has the seniority to obtain, he suffers irreparable injury and so does the labor force of the country as a whole.
> Moreover, we hold as did the court in Vogler v. McCarty, Inc., 294 F. Supp. 368, 372 (E.D., La. 1967) affirmed 407 F. 2d 1047 (5th Cir., 1969) that where an employer has engaged in a pattern and practice of discrimination on account of race, et cetera, in order to insure the full enjoyment of the rights protected by title VII of the 1954 Civil Rights Act, affirmative and mandatory preliminary relief is required. 415 F. 2d at 1045.

The Commission may not bring an action for preliminary relief u it has issued a complaint. However, in those cases where the need preliminary relief is serious—including but in no way limited to si tions where aggrieved persons are transferred, fired, or other harassed for bringing other charges before the Commission—the C mission is expected to act swiftly in issuing a complaint so that person aggrieved will not be harmed by a delay between the time charge is filed and the issuance of the complaint by the Commissio

We have had no experience with Administration cease and d orders issued by EEOC. Therefore the Committee does not rec mend, at this time, that civil penalties be imposed upon respond who refuse to obey Commission orders prior to the entry of a de of the Court of Appeals enforcing such orders. However, the C mittee does wish to emphasize the need for prompt action by Commission to secure enforcement of its orders. In that connect the Committee expects the Commission will take full advantag the availability of preliminary relief from the Courts of App of the summary procedures available in the Courts of Appeals the provisions of Rule 38 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Proced which authorize the imposition of damages and double costs in case of frivolous appeals.

PRIVATE ACTIONS

The bill contains a provision (sec. 706(q)) that if the Commis dismisses a charge, or, within 180 days of its filing has neither is a complaint nor entered into a conciliation or settlement agreem which is acceptable to the Commission and the aggrieved party, it s so notify the aggrieved party. Within 60 days after such notifica the person aggrieved, or, in the case of a charge filed by an offic employee of the Commission, the person or persons named in charge, shall have the right to commence a private civil action in appropriate U.S. district court.

The committee is aware that in recent years regulatory age have been submerged in increasing workloads which strain their sources to the breaking point. The EEOC is no exception to this pr lem. As it indicated in testimony, its caseload has increased at a which surpasses its own projections. The result has been increa backlogs in making determinations, and the possibility of occasi hasty decisions, made under the press of time, which have unfa prejudiced complaints. Accordingly, where the Commission is able to pursue a complaint with satisfactory speed, or enters into agreement which is not acceptable to the aggrieved party, the provides that the individual shall have an opportunity to seek his remedy, even though he may have originally submitted his charg the Commission. It is expected that recourse to this remedy will be exception and not the rule, particularly once the Commission's forcement procedures are fully operational. In the meantime, howe the committee believes that the aggrieved person should be given opportunity to escape the administrative process when he feels claim has not been given adequate attention.

committee is concerned, however, about the interplay between wly created enforcement powers of the Commission and the g right of private action. It concluded that duplication of progs should be avoided. The bill therefore contains a provision off of the Commission's jurisdiction once the private action has led—except for the power to intervene—as well as a cutoff of ht of private action once the Commission issues a complaint or

SPECIAL ENFORCEMENT PROCEDURE FOR CASES INVOLVING EMPLOYEES STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

In those cases involving a respondent which is a "government, g ernmental agency, or political subdivision", and in which EEO(been unable to secure voluntary compliance as provided under sec 706(b) and (f), the bill provides that the Commission shall refer case to the Attorney General for filing of a civil action against respondent in the appropriate U.S. district court. A person aggrie is given the right to intervene in such civil actions.

The committee has no doubt of the need for strong enforcemen equal employment opportunity at all levels of government, and belie that governmental units should lead the way in providing equal opp tunity.

Accordingly, the committee bill provides for coverage of State a local government employees and for a concommitant means of enfo ment to make that coverage meaningful. By placing the full weigh the U.S. Attorney General and the authority of the U.S. dist courts behind equal employment opportunity at the State and lo government level, the committee believes that the machinery has b provided to insure State and local leadership in the area of e employment opportunity.

This enforcement scheme provides the necessary power to achi results without the needless friction that might be created by a Fede executive agency issuing orders to sovereign States and their loc ties. In short, the committee believes that the objective of equal e ployment opportunity can best be achieved by providing this parti lar means of enforcement where State or local governmental units f to comply with the law.

FAIRNESS AND DUE PROCESS

Recognizing the importance that the concept of due process pl in the American ideal of justice, the committee wishes to empha certain provisions which are included in the bill to insure that f ness and due process are part of the enforcement scheme.

(a) Protection of rights of respondent.—The bill contains a num of provisions designed to protect fully the rights of the person or p sons against whom the charge is filed:

1. The committee retained the requirement that charges be in w ing. The Commission must serve the respondent with a notice of charge, which would advise the respondent of the nature of the leged violation. As amended by the committee, the bill would req such notice to be served on the respondent within 10 days. (sec. (b)).

2. During the Commission's investigation of the charge, the a gations would not be made public by the Commission, and it wo undertake to resolve the matter by informal means before issuing complaint (sec. 706(b)).

3. If the Commission decides to issue a complaint, it would served upon the respondent (sec. 706(f)), who would then hav right to file an answer and to amend it with leave of the Commiss ave is to be granted under normal circumstances. The respondld be a party to the proceedings before the Commission, and d have a right to appear at any stage of these proceedings, without counsel. (Sec. 706 (g).) arings of the Commission must be on the record and under visions of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. 551, (sec. 706(j)). Such proceedings provide the maximum prof the rights of all parties to the proceedings.

e respondent would have the right to seek judicial review of ission decision which ruled against him, and he could petition reme Court for certiorari from an unfavorable decision of the appeals. (Sec. 706(k).)
eparation of functions.—The provisions of the bill and title 5 nited States Code refered to above, would insure that the rsons would not both prosecute and decide cases for the sion. Section 554(d) of title 5 imposes the following requiren the operations of administrative agencies, such as the sion, whose decisions must be made after hearing and on the person presiding at the reception of evidence (typically, the examiner) may not be responsible to or subject to the supervi-irection of any person engaged in the performance of investi-prosecuting functions.

employee of the agency performing investigative or prosecu-ctions in a particular case may not participate in or advise ecision, recommended decision, or agency review in that or a related case, except as a witness or as counsel in public ngs.
ct effect of these provisions would be to prevent the inter-of functions within the Commission. rotection of rights of person aggrieved—In addition to the s already discussed involving the individual right to sue, the persons claiming to be aggrieved would be further protected llowing provisions:
rges may be filed by or on behalf of an aggrieved person. The sion is directed to make its findings on reasonable cause as as possible, and so far as practicable, within 120 days of the the charge. The committee, as noted above, considers prompt charges and complaints to be a major responsibility of the sion in all cases. The existing 90-day time limitation on filing has been extended by 90 days (sec. 706(e)). he Commission finds no reasonable cause to believe that the true, or enters into a settlement which is not acceptable to ieved person, the aggrieved person would still have a right of ainst the respondent.
aggrieved person would have a right to be a party to all pro-before the Commission and to be represented by counsel of his if he desires. Particularly at the hearing stage, the guarantees istrative due process as provided by the Administrative Pro-ct should be scrupulously maintained. As one authority has out:

he true principle is that a party who has a sufficient inter-r right at stake in a determination of govenmental action should be entitled to an opportunity to know and to meet with the weapons of rebuttal evidence, cross-examination and argument, unfavorable evidence of adjudicative facts . . ." 1 K. Davis, Treatise on Administrative Law 412.

The right of a person to participate at the hearing stage through own counsel is intended to supplement or complement, but in no w replace, the traditional advocate role of the representatives of the mission charged with carrying forward the complaint.

Provisions of present law requiring that the person aggrieve notified of his rights have been retained. Especially in light o further safeguards in this bill, the Commission is expected, a commencement and at other appropriate stages of the proceedin fully notify the aggrieved person in clear and understandable fa of the various procedural rights and steps open to him. Too of person files a charge but then blunders along lost in the bureau process. The committee believes that further steps should be t including perhaps followup notification, to ensure that an aggr person knows at apropriate times the status of the case and his r under the law.

(d) "Commissioner's complaint" provision—The provision per ting a member of the Commission to file a charge of unlawful em ment practice as contained in the present section 706 was amende the committee to provide for such charges to be made by an offi employee of the Commission upon the request of any person cla to be aggrieved. The original bill had continued the Commissio charge but would have barred the Commissioner filing the charge participating in a hearing except as a witness. The committee cluded that this provision might cause some appearance of confli interest if Commissioners were to hear charges placed by a colle moreover the Commission's caseload might not permit the routin qualification of Commissioners who had placed charges.

Placing the authority to make a charge at a lower level of the C mission, however, would accomplish the same purposes while avo these problems.

The purpose of this provision is to enable aggrieved perso have charges processed under circumstances where they are unw to come forward publicly for fear of economic or physical repris this connection the committee wishes to make clear that the f of a Commission charge may be used to maintain the confide identity of the persons aggrieved and that no disclosure need be m of the identity of the person aggrieved at any stage of the proce unless it is voluntary or in such circumstances where the perso grieved is required to be a witness.

This section is not intended in any way to restrict the filing of complaints. The committee agrees with the courts that title VII a are by their very nature class complains,[16] and that any restrictio such actions would greatly undermine the effectiveness of title VI the broad-scale actions against any "pattern or practice" of nation that have been brought by the Justice Department ction 707 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, have been an in-nd important part of the overall Federal effort to combat dis-ion, the committee believes that with the enactment of legisroviding the Commission with effective power to enforce title further retention of section 707 power in the Department of s not necessary. With the adoption of this bill, which includes sfer to the Commission of the functions of the Office of Federal Compliance (OFCC) and the functions of the Department e, the Federal Government, through the procedures of the sion, will be able to pursue a unified program of attack upon nts of employment discrimination.

yees would benefit by having to look to only one agency to lief; employers similarly would be free from the burden of investigations examining their employment policies and per-cords in response to similar or identical complaints filed with agencies.[17]

rly, the duplication of effort that would inevitably result from ursuits of identical complaints, with the appurtenant double nd unnecessary waste of scarce legal talent, is something the e wishes to avoid by effecting the transfer.

viding for the transfer of the authority under section 707, the e has, however, retained jurisdiction in the Department of or the first 2 years after enactment of the bill to bring "patractice" suits where necessary. The committee believes that safeguard the important "pattern or practice" power, while me time providing for a smooth and efficient transfer of that y.

ommittee recognizes that with the institution of the new ent powers, the Commission will have to undertake extensive reorganization, and will have to cope with its present back-he press of incoming cases at the same time. In light of this, mission may not be able to fully utilize the "pattern or pracnction immediately. It is expected, however, that the two will exercise concurrent jurisdiction over "pattern or prac-forcement during the first 2 years of operation under the

In this regard, the committee believes that it is incumbent up and conflicting approaches to the implementation of the statut

The committee also believes that the future transfer of the "pa or practice" authority should not be a burden upon the already resources of the Commission. Accordingly, the committee has vided that along with the transfer of the functions, there woul be a transfer of the funds and personnel positions previously bud for this work in the Department of Justice.

(b) Transfer of Contract Compliance activities to EEOC.—

In 1969, then Secretary of Labor Shultz, testifying befo Committee asked for time for the new administration to get its in order. The Department's testimony this year suggested that re cess is just around the corner.

The rights of minorities and women are too important to co this important function in an agency that has not really been a achieve the promised results. The contract compliance progra important and viable tool in the government's efforts to achieve employment opportunity. It should have a chance to operate in a atmosphere with an agency that has Equal Employment Oppo ties as its sole priority.

CHANGES IN RECORDKEEPING REQUIREMENTS

Section 709 is revised to provide a more effective system for re ing records to be kept, to permit the Commission to arrange for a priate operating agreements with State and local fair emplo practice agencies, to provide a scheme for avoiding duplication o ords, and for agreements to share information with Federal, and local agencies.

The committee believes strongly that adequate records are ess to the proper and effective administration of this Title. However also mindful of the increasing burdens that employers and union faced with under the proliferation of statutes and regulations affect them. Therefore, the committee urges the Commission to u take serious efforts to ease the paperwork requirements under th consistent with maximum efforts to secure complete compliance the law.

EXPANSION OF COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

The bill contains two provisions (Secs. 705(a) and 713(d)) des to help the Commission deal promptly with the huge volume of expected to come before it for decision upon the enactment of thi These provisions authorize the President, at the request of the C man of the Commission, to appoint up to four additional membe the Commission by and with the advice and consent of the S and permit the Commission itself to sit in panels of three mem

As has already been noted in this report, the number of charges with the EEOC during the past several years has exceeded all e tations at the time the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was enacted. Fur more, the volume of charges continues to increase, with over charges expected to be filed during the current fiscal year.

While it is impossible to state with assurance at this time wh workload of the Commission will be, the Committee believes authorization for additional Commissioners and the use of member panels should provide sufficient flexibility for the Comm to manage its caseload expeditiously.

ESTIMATE OF COSTS

ordance with the requirements of section 252 of the Legislative zation Act of 1970, the Commission has prepared an estimate ojected costs for the new areas of enforcement activity for bill provides. It is the committee's view that the accompany- es represent a reasonable estimate of the minimum additional y requirements for administration of these new undertakings:

l also contains provisions for the transfer of two activities administered by different agencies of the Government. As fer of these activities also involves transfer of funds and positions allocated to those agencies, the cost estimates for vities are based upon cost projections by the agencies pres- inistering those operations:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 2

This section amends certain definitions in section 701 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Section 701(a).—This subsection defines "person" to include State and local governments, governmental agencies and political subdivisions.

Section 701(b).—This subsection would extend coverage of employers to those with 8 or more employees one year after enactment. The standard for determining the number of employees of an employer, that is, "employees for each working day in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year," would apply to employers of 25 or more employees during the first year as well as the final coverage of eight or more employees. This subsection would broaden the meaning of "employer" to include State and local governments and the District of Columbia departments or agencies (except those subject by statute to procedures of the Federal competitive service as defined in 5 U.S.C. 2102, who are covered by section 717, as are all Federal employees).

Section 701(c).—This subsection eliminates the exemption for agencies of the United States, States or political subdivisions of States from the definition of "employment agency" in order to conform with the expanded coverage of State and local governments in section 701(a) and (b). State employment services, previously covered by reference to the United States Employment Service, continue to be covered as part of the State or local government coverage. Employees of the United States Employment Service, as Federal employees, are covered by the new section 717 of the act.

Section 701(e).—This subsection is revised to include coverage of labor organizations with 8 or more members one year after enactment.

SECTION 3

Section 702 is amended to eliminate the exemption for employment of individuals engaged in educational activities of non-religious educational institutions. It continues the exemption for employment of aliens outside the United States and for a religious corporation, association, educational institution or society with respect to employment of individuals of a particular religion to perform work connected with religious activities.

SECTION 4(a)

This section amends sections 706 (a)–(e) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 entitled "Prevention of Unlawful Employment Practices."

Section 706(a).—This subsection would empower the Commission to prevent persons from engaging in unlawful employment practices er sections 703 and 704 of title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. ction 706(b).—This subsection prescribes the procedures to be owed when a charge of an unlawful employment practice is filed the Commission. The Commission must serve a notice of the ge on the respondent within ten days, investigate the charge and e its determination on whether there is reasonable cause to believe the charge is true. It is not the intent of the committee that fail-to give notice within ten days should prejudice the rights of an ieved party. If it finds no reasonable cause, the Commission must iss the charge; if it finds reasonable cause, it must attempt to iliate the case. The subsection makes a number of changes in ing law:

Under present law, a charge may be filed only by a person ieved under oath or by a member of the Commission where he has nable cause to believe a violation has occurred. This subsection is ded to permit a charge to be filed by or on behalf of a person ieved or by an officer or employee of the Commission upon the st of a person claiming to be aggrieved.

The Commission would be required to make its determination asonable cause as promptly as possible and, "so far as practicable," in 120 days from the filing of the charge or from the date upon h the Commission is authorized to act on the charge under n 706(c) or (d). The Commission is required in its determination asonable cause to accord substantial weight to final findings and s made by State or local authorities under State and local laws.
This subsection and section 8(c) of the bill add appropriate isions to carry out the intent of the present statute to provide coverage for joint labor-management committees controlling nticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job ing programs. While these joint labor-management committees rohibited under section 703(d) of the present act from discrimi-g, they were not expressly included in the prohibition against iminatory advertising or retaliation against persons participating mmission proceedings (sec. 704(a) and (b)) or in the procedures ling charges in section 706(a). tion 706(c).—This provision retains the present requirement the Commission defer for a period of 60 days to State or local ies functioning under appropriate anti-discrimination laws 20 days during the first year after the effective date of such law).
nly change in the present law is to delete the phrase "no charge e filed" with the Commission by an aggrieved person in such State ality. The present statute is somewhat ambiguous respecting Comon action on charges filed prior to resort to the State or local
y. The new language clarifies the present statute by permitting the e to be filed but prohibiting the Commission from taking action respect thereto until the prescribed period has elapsed.
tion 706(d).—This subsection requires deferral to State or anti-discrimination agencies in the case of charges filed by an or employee of the Commission.
tion 706(e).—This subsection prescribes the time limits for the of a charge. Under the present statute, the charge must be within 90 days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred. In cases where the Commission defers to a State or local agency, the charge must presently be filed within 210 days of the occurrence of the alleged unlawful practice, or within 30 days after the person aggrieved receives notice that the State or local agency has terminated its proceedings, whichever is earlier. This subsection would permit charges to be filed within 180 days of the alleged unlawful practice—a limitation period similar to that contained in the Labor-Management Relations Act, as amended (29 U.S.C. 160(b)). Where the Commission defers to a State or local agency, the time limit is extended to 300 days after the occurrence of the alleged unlawful practice or 30 days after receipt of notice that the State or local agency has terminated its proceedings. This subsection also requires that notice of the charge be served on the respondent within ten days after its having been filed.

Sections 706(f) through 706(p).—These subsections, which are new, set forth the procedure to be followed where the Commission, after finding reasonable cause to believe that the allegations of the charge are true, is unable to conciliate the case. The hearing and review requirements are similar to those found in most statutes governing administrative agencies.

Section 706(f).—Under this subsection, if the Commission is unable to secure a conciliation agreement pursuant to section 706(b) that is acceptable to the Commission, it would promptly issue and serve upon the respondent a complaint and notice of hearing if the respondent is not a government, governmental agency or political subdivision. In the latter case, if conciliation fails, the Commission will take no further action and refer the case to the Attorney General for filing a civil action in the district courts. Such civil actions are to be governed by sections 706 (q) through (w), as applicable. The Commission's determination that it is unable to secure such an agreement would not be reviewable in court. Conciliation agreements entered into by the Commission would be enforceable in court in accordance with the provisions of section 706(l). If an officer or employee of the Commission files a charge, he shall not participate in a hearing in any complaint arising out of such charge, except as a witness.

Section 706(g).—This subsection prescribes certain statutory procedural requirements after a complaint is issued by the Commission. The respondent would be provided an opportunity to file an answer to the complaint, and to amend its answer upon a showing of reasonableness and fairness. The respondent and the aggrieved person are full parties and are permitted to appear at any stage of the proceeding. The Commission could also, in its discretion, grant to other persons the right to intervene, to file briefs, or to make oral argument, as it deems appropriate. Testimony at hearings must be under oath and reduced to writing and proceedings shall, so far as practicable, be conducted in accordance with the rules of evidence in the district courts of the United States. This last provision is similar to that contained in the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 160(b)). As specified in section 706(j), all hearings must be conducted in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act. The only persons, in addition to members of the Commission, who may preside at hearings are hearing examiners appointed under section 3105 of title 5 of the United States Code.

ction 706(h).—The subsection provides that if the Commission, owing a hearing, finds that the respondent has engaged in an unlaw- employment practice, it shall state its findings of fact and issue order to be served on the parties, requiring that the respondent e and desist from its unlawful conduct and take such affirmative on, including reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or with- back pay as will effectuate the policies of the Act. Interim earnings mounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the aggrieved per- would operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable. If any t back pay liability is limited to two years prior to the filing of a ge with the Commission. The order could also require that the re- dent make reports from time to time to the Commission. If the mission finds no unlawful employment practice, it would state findings and issue an order dismissing the complaint. The pro- n is intended to give the Commission wide discretion in fashion- the most complete relief possible to eliminate all of the conse- ces of the unlawful employment practice caused by, or attribut- to, the respondent.

ction 706(i).—This subsection would make clear the authority e Commission, any time after a charge has been filed until the d is filed in court, to end proceedings by agreement with the ndent for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment ice. Agreements entered into under this section or section 706(f) d be enforceable in the appropriate court of appeals under section (1) through (n). The Commission would also be able, upon rea- ble notice, to modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding der made or issued by it. The right of the aggrieved person to file il action is preserved in section 706(q)(2) in those cases where ggrieved person is not a party to the agreement.

ction 706(j).—This subsection requires that findings of fact and s made or issued under subsection (h) or (i) be on the record in dance with the Administrative Procedure Act.

ction 706(k).—This subsection would permit a party aggrieved final order of the Commission—the respondent or the person or ns on whose behalf the charge was filed—to seek review of such in a U.S. court of appeals within 60 days after the service of the mission's order. The subsection specifies the procedures to be wed after a petition for review is filed, including:

(1) The clerk of the court transmits a copy of the petition to he Commission and to any other party to the proceeding before he Commission;

(2) The Commission files in court the record in the proceedings ursuant to 28 U.S.C. 2112 at which time the court of appeals as exclusive jurisdiction;

(3) The Court of Appeals is authorized to grant such temporary elief, restraining order, or other orders as it deems just and proper nd may enter a decree enforcing, modifying and enforcing as so nodified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Com- nission. The findings of fact by the Commission are conclusive if hey are supported by substantial evidence on the record con- idered as a whole:

(4) Any party to the proceedings before the Commission may ntervene in the court of appeals and a party may apply for leave to adduce additional evidence before the Commission, which could then modify its original findings. Modified findings would also be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole;

(5) Objections not urged before the Commission, its member or agent, will not be considered by the court unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection is excused because of extraordinary circumstances;

(6) Commencement of proceedings under this subsection would not stay the Commission's order unless ordered by the court; and

(7) The courts of appeals are required to hear petitions expeditiously. This requirement is intended to emphasize to the courts of appeals the need for promptly acting on petitions in order to have speedy resolution of these cases.

Section 706(l).—This subsection would authorize the Commission to petition a U.S. court of appeals for enforcement of its order. The prescribed procedures in the case of petitions for enforcement under this subsection are similar to section 706(k) except that no time limit is specified for the enforcement petition other than that provided by section 706(m) regarding the self-enforcement procedure. The Commission would be authorized to seek an order from the court for temporary or preliminary enforcement of its order pending complete review by the court of appeals.

Section 706(m).—Under this subsection, if there is no petition for review filed within 60 days as provided in section 706(k), the Commission's findings of fact and order would become conclusive in connection with any petition for enforcement filed pursuant to section 706(l). If the Commission petitions for an enforcement order thereafter, the clerk of the court of appeals would enter a decree enforcing the order of the Commission and transmit copies to the Commission, the respondent, and any other parties to the proceeding before the Commission.

Section 706(n).—This subsection provides that any person entitled to relief under a Commission order could obtain enforcement of the order if within 90 days after service of the Commission's order there has been no petition for review filed under subsection (k) or no petition for enforcement filed by the Commission under subsections (l) or (m). The procedures and provisions of subsection (m) would apply to such petition for enforcement.

Section 706(o).—This subsection provides that the Attorney General would conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation, except that relating to governments, governmental agencies, and political subdivisions which is conducted by the Attorney General, including litigation arising under sections 706 (k), (l), (m), (n), (p), (q), or 707, litigation arising in connection with the Commission's record-keeping requirements under section 709, the enforcement of the Commission's authority to conduct investigations under section 710, and private litigation in which the Commission is involved as amicus curiae, as well as judicial proceedings in which the Commission intervenes, shall be conducted by attorneys appointed by the Commission.

ection 706(p).—Under this subsection, if, after a charge is filed er section 706(b), the Commission concludes on the basis of a pre-inary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to pree its power to grant effective relief in the proceeding, it must bring action for appropriate preliminary or temporary relief in the ted States district court in the judicial district in which the unlaw-employment practice is alleged to have been committed, where the son would have been employed but for the alleged unlawful prac-
, or if the respondent is not to be found in any of these districts, in judicial district where the respondent has its principal office.
subsection further provides that for purposes of 28 U.S.C. 1404 1406 (which permit the court to transfer an action to another ju-al district where the action might have been brought) the district hich the respondent has his principal office is to be considered a cial district where the action might have been brought.
his subsection, in addition, would make rule 65 of the Federal s of Civil Procedure, except paragraph (a)(2) thereof, applicto proceedings under section 706(p). Rule 65 prescribes proced-requirements for the granting of temporary restraining orders preliminary injunctions. Paragraph (a)(2) of rule 65 permits court to advance the trial of the merits and to consolidate the trial he merits with the hearing on the application for injunction. This ision would be inapplicable to proceedings under section 706(p). ny relief ordered by the court under this subsection would be per-d to run until such time as a court of appeals has assumed jurison of a review or enforcement petition. ction 706(q).—This subsection preserves the private right of n by an aggrieved person. Under this subsection, the aggrieved on may bring such an action within 60 days after being notified he Commission that it has dismissed the charge, or when 180 days elapsed from the filing of the charge without the Commission ng issued a complaint under section 706(f) or the Attorney eral having filed a civil action under section 706(f) or without Commission having entered into an agreement under section 706
r (i) to which the person aggrieved is a party.
he subsection would also divest the Commission of jurisdiction any pending proceedings upon the filing of a private action.
ersely, the right of an aggrieved party to bring a private action d terminate once the Commission issued a complaint under sub-on 706(f), or the Attorney General filed a civil action under sub-on 706(f), or the Commission entered into a conciliation agree-under subsection 706 (f) or (i) to which the person aggrieved is ty. If the Commission does not issue an order within 180 days it issues a complaint or within 60 days after receipt of notice in ase of an agreement under subsection (i) to which the person aged is not a party, the aggrieved person may also institute a civil
n. If such action is instituted within one year of the issuance of Commission's complaint, the Commission may request that it be d or dismissed upon a showing that it has been acting with due nce, that it anticipates issuance of an order within a reasonable on the complaint, that the case or proceeding is exceptional and extension of exclusive jurisdiction of the Commission is warranted.

SECTION 4 (b) AND (d)

These sections redesignate the paragraph numbers of subsection 706(e) through (k) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 as subsection 706(q) through (w), and also redesignate other paragraph numbers to be consistent with the changes made in section 706.

Section 4(c).—This section adds a sentence to subsection 706(f) which clarifies the power of the district courts to grant temporary relief in civil actions brought under title VII.

SECTION 5

This section amends section 707, concerning the Attorney General's "pattern or practice" action, to provide for a transfer of this function to the Commission two years after the enactment of the bill. The bill further provides for concurrent "pattern or practice" jurisdiction for the Commission from the date of enactment until the transfer is complete. The transfer is subject to change in accordance with a Presidential reorganization plan if not vetoed by Congress. The section would provide that currently pending proceedings would continue without abatement, that all court orders and decrees remain in effect, and that upon the transfer the Commission would be substituted as a party for the United States of America or the Attorney General as appropriate. The Commission would have authority to investigate and act on pattern or practice charges except that any action would follow the procedures of section 706.

SECTION 6

This section amends section 709 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 entitled "Investigations, Inspections, Records, State Agencies."

Section 709(a).—This subsection, which gives the Commission the right to examine and copy documents in connection with its investigation of a charge, would remain unchanged.

Section 709(b).—This subsection would authorize the Commission to cooperate with State and local fair employment practice agencies in order to carry out the purposes of the title, and to enter into agreements with such agencies, under which the Commission would refrain from processing certain types of charges or relieve persons from the recordkeeping requirements. This subsection would make two changes in the present statute. Under this subsection, the Commission could, within the limitations of funds appropriated for the purpose, also engage in and contribute to the cost of research and other projects undertaken by these State and local agencies and pay these agencies in advance for services rendered to the Commission. The subsection also deletes the reference to private civil actions under section 706(f) of the present statute.

Section 709(c).—This subsection, like the present statute, would require employers, employment agencies, labor organizations, and joint labor-management apprenticeship committees subject to the title to make and keep certain records and to make reports therefrom to the Commission. Under the present statute, a party required to keep records could seek an exemption from these requirements on the d of undue hardship either by applying to the Commission or ng a civil action in the district court. This subsection would re- he party seeking the exemption first to make an application to mmission and only if the Commission denies the request could rty bring an action in the district court. This subsection would uthorize the Commission to apply for a court order compelling iance with the recordkeeping and reporting obligations set in the subsection.

ion 709(d).—This subsection would eliminate the present ex- on from recordkeeping requirements for those employers in and political subdivisions with fair employment practice laws or ployers subject to Federal executive order or agency recordkeep- quirements. Under this subsection, the Commission would con- ith interested State and other Federal agencies in order to co- te the Federal recordkeeping requirements under section 709(c) hose adopted by such agencies. The subsection further provides e Commission furnish to such agencies information pertaining e and local fair employment agencies, on condition that the in- ion would not be made public prior to the institution of State l proceedings.

ion 709(e).—Under this subsection, the Commission or the ey General would have the authority to direct the person hav- stody of any record or paper required by section 709(c) to be ved or maintained to make such record or paper available for ion or copying by the Commission or the Attorney General. strict court of the judicial district where the demand is made or pers are located would have jurisdiction by appropriate process pel the production of such record or paper. The subsection fur- rovides that the members of the Commission and its repre- ves or the Attorney General and his representatives, could not, ordered by the court, disclose any record or paper produced to Congress or a congressional committee, to other government es, or in the presentation of cases before a court or a grand jury.

SECTION 7

section would amend section 710 of the Civil Rights Act of o make section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (29 161), except for one provision thereof, applicable to Commis- vestigations. This section would require the Commission or a r thereof, upon application of a party, to issue a subpoena re- the attendance and testimony of a witness or the production of idence in a proceeding. The person served with the subpoena petition the Commission to revoke the subpoena within 5 days. plication of the Commission, an appropriate district court could person to obey a subpoena and failure to comply with the court would be punishable in contempt proceedings.

er this section, the Commission would not be authorized to subpoena on the application of a private party before it issues plaint and notice of hearing. This provision, which is in accord he actual practice of the National Labor Relations Board, would give the Commission exclusive authority to conduct the pr hearing investigation.

Section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act also contains pr visions relating to privileges of witnesses, immunity from prose tion, fees, process, service, and return, and information and assista from other agencies.

SECTION 8 (a) AND (b)

These subsections would amend sections 703(a)(2) and 703(c) of the present statute to make it clear that discrimination agai applicants for employment and applicants for membership in lab organizations is an unlawful employment practice. This subsecti would merely be declaratory of present law.

SECTIONS 8(C) (1) AND (2)

These subsections would amend section 704 (a) and (b) of the pr ent statute to make clear that joint labor-management apprenticesh committees are covered by those provisions which relate to discrim natory advertising and retaliation against individuals participating Commission proceedings.

SECTION 8(d)

This subsection would amend section 705(a) of the present statu to provide for the appointment of up to four new Commission me bers at any time after one year from the effective date of the act the request of the Chairman, and at the discretion of the Presid with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than the le number of members sufficient to constitute a majority may be of t same political party.

Further, this subsection would amend section 705(a) of the prese statute to permit a member of the Commission to serve until his su cessor is appointed but not for more than 60 days when Congress is session unless the successor has been nominated and the nominati submitted to the Senate, or after the adjournment sine die of the se sion of the Senate in which such nomination was submitted.

The rest of the subsection is substantially the same as present se tion 705(a) and would make the Chairman of the Commission, behalf of the Commission, responsible for the administrative oper tions of the Commission and for the appointment of officers, agen attorneys, hearing examiners and other employees of the Commiss in accordance with Federal law.

SECTION 8(e)

This subsection would amend section 705(g)(1) of the present s to permit the Commission to accept uncompensated services. It is i tended to permit the Commission to utilize these services for such pu poses as education, publicity, and the collection of data. It would n be expected to accept such services in connection with the prosecutio or decision of cases before it except in extraordinary situations.

SECTION 8(f)

s subsection would eliminate the provision in present section) authorizing the Commission to request the Attorney General rvene in private civil actions and instead permit the Commission to intervene in such civil actions as provided in section 706(q).

SECTION 8(g)

s subsection would, subject to certain exceptions, permit the ission to delegate any of its functions, duties and powers to such s as it may designate by regulation. A number of other agencies road authority to delegate functions; for example, the Securities xchange Commission (15 U.S.C. 78d–1), the Interstate Com- Commission (49 U.S.C. 17(5)), and the Federal Communica- ommission (47 U.S.C. 155(d)). The exceptions are as follows:

(1) The Commission could not delegate its powers to make cisions on the merits after administrative hearings under sec- n 706(h) or to modify or set aside its findings or make new dings under section 706(i), (k), and (l). However, like the ational Labor Relations Board (29 U.S.C. 153(b)), the Com- ssion would be authorized to delegate this power or any of its ner powers to groups of three or more members of the Commis- n;

(2) The Commission could not delegate its authority under tion 713(c) to make rules of general applicability. A similar itation is imposed on the Securities and Exchange Commission 5 U.S.C. 78d–1(a));

(3) The Commission could not delegate its authority under tion 709(b) to make agreements with States under which the mmission agrees to refrain from processing certain charges or relieve certain persons from the recordkeeping requirements; d

(4) The Commission could not provide for the conduct of ad- nistrative hearings except by members of the Commission or hearing officers appointed in accord with 5 U.S.C. 556.

SECTION 8(h)

subsection would afford additional protection to officers, agents, ployees of the Commission in the performance of their official by making 18 U.S.C. 1114 applicable to them.

SECTION 9(a), (b), AND (c) e subsections would make certain modifications in the position Chairman of the Commission and the members of the Commis- the executive pay scale, so as to place them in a position of with officials in comparable positions in agencies having sub- lly equivalent powers such as the National Labor Relations the Federal Trade Commission and the Federal Power ssion.

SECTION 10

Section 715.—This section transfers all of the powers and duties of the Secretary of Labor under Executive Order 11246 (as amended by Executive order 11375) to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Executive Order 11246 enunciates the policy of the Government of the United States "... to provide equal opportunity in Federal employment for all qualified persons, to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, and to promote the full realization of equal employment opportunity through a positive, continuing program in each executive department and agency. . ." (E.O. 11246 § 101 as amended). The Executive order program is presently administered within the Department of Labor by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, a division of the Employment Standards Administration. The section contemplates the transfer of all of the OFCC program functions related to Executive Order 11246, as amended. This section does not relieve any of the Government procurement agencies of their responsibilities under the executive order.

The present section 715 relating to a special study by the Secretary of Labor is repealed by the substitution of the new provisions. The study has been completed and the section has no more effect.

SECTION 11

Section 717(a).—This subsection would make clear that personnel actions of the U.S. Government affecting employees or applicants for employment shall be made free from any discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. All employees subject to the executive branch and Civil Service Commission control or protection are covered by this section.

Section 717(b).—Under this subsection, the Civil Service Commission is given the authority to enforce the provisions of subsection (a) through appropriate remedies. These remedies may include back pay for applicants, as well as employees, denied promotion opportunities, reinstatement, hire, immediate promotion and any other remedy needed to fully recompense the employee for his loss, both financially and professionally. The Civil Service Commission is also given authority to issue rules and regulations necessary to carry out its responsibilities under this section. The Civil Service Commission also shall annually review national and regional equal employment opportunity plans and be responsible for review and evaluation of all agency equal employment opportunity programs. Finally, agency and executive department heads and officers of the District of Columbia shall comply with such rules and regulations, submit an annual equal employment opportunity plan and notify any employee or applicant of any final action taken on any complaint of discrimination filed by him.

Sections 717(c) and (d).—The provisions of sections 706(f) through (w) concerning private civil actions by aggrieved persons are made applicable to aggrieved Federal employees or applicants. They could file a civil action within 30 days of notice of final action complaint made pursuant to section 717(b), or after 180 days he filing of an initial charge, or an appeal with the Commission.

uthority given to the Commission or the limitations placed upon ommission under sections 706(q) through (w) would apply to vil Service Commission or the agencies, as appropriate, in conn with a civil action brought under section 717(c). So, for ex-
, if the Civil Service Commission or agency does not issue an within 180 days after a complaint or appeal is filed, the aggrieved may also institute a civil action. If such action is instituted one year of the filing of the complaint or appeal, the Civil e Commission or agency may request that the action be stayed nissed upon a showing that it has been acting with due diligence, anticipates issuance of an order within a reasonable time on the int or appeal, that the case or proceeding is exceptional and tension of exclusive jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commisagency is warranted.

ion 717(e).—This subsection provides that nothing in this act s any Government agency or official of his existing nondiscrimiobligations under the Constitution, other statutes, or his or its sibilities under Executive Order 11478 relating to equal employpportunity in the Federal Government.

SECTION 12

on 716 is amended to provide for consultation of the Attorney l, the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, and the Chair-the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission regarding regulations and policy in the performance of their responsi-under this act. It does not in any way limit each of the officials pendently carrying out their respective obligations under this section provides that the amended provisions of section 706 ing the cease and desist enforcement powers would not apply ges filed with the Commission prior to the effective date of

SECTION 13

. In addition, those new or amended sections of title VII not ally stated in this section to be inapplicable to current charges, the amendments to sections 705, 707, 709, 710, 713, and 715 over existing charges.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF MR. DOMINICK

e enactment as part of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Title VII od as a national commitment to the elimination of all forms of ment discrimination. Unfortunately, such a commitment has ed only a statement which, because of the lack of enforcement ery, has not been translated into concrete realities for those in ion's workforce who have been denied employment benefits e of their race, color, religion, sex or national origin. The issue nger whether we need enforcement powers for Title VII, but what form and scope of enforcement is needed to best protect hts of all parties involved. To accomplish this end the Senate two types of enforcement machinery to choose from—vesting with cease and desist powers or giving EEOC the authority irectly in Federal Courts.

Elemental Arguments Misleading

verly simplistic to argue as many have, that protection of em- rights can best be achieved by vesting the present pro-employee ssion with as much enforcement power as possible. The vicissi- Presidentially appointed Boards is legend. The administrative possessing enforcement powers most similar to the cease and owers advocated by the majority, the National Labor Relations provides the best example of this. Critics charge that the in reacting to political winds rather than stare decisis, have ed from pro-management decisions during the Eisenhower istration to pro-labor positions during the Johnson and Ken- dministration. Determination of employment civil rights de- and requires non-partisan judgment. This judgment is best d by Federal court judges who, shielded from political influ- life tenure, are more likely to withstand political pressures der their decisions in a climate tempered by judicial reflection pported by historical judicial independence.

wise simplistic reasoning has classified proponents of court en- nt as being pro-respondent or anti-employees' rights. Nothing e less correct. Both procedures seek to achieve the same end— redress of employees' grievances. Although I opposed the cease sist provisions, I voted to report S. 2515, as amended, out of tee favorably as I was most encouraged by the potential relief promise amendments offered federal employees. As the report es, these employees are the most frustrated in achieving equal ment opportunity. I authored an amendment with Senator n which was adopted that provided the approximately 2.6 mil- il service and postal workers with court redress of their employ- iscrimination grievances. The amendment creates machinery ed by Clarence Mitchell, Director, Washington Bureau,

NAACP, whereby an aggrieved civil service or postal employee h the option after exhausting his agency remedies, of either institut a civil suit in Federal district court or continuing through the C Service Board of Appeals and Reviews to district court, if necessa

Curiously enough, the majority seems pleased with court enfor ment procedures for 2.6 million federal employees, but continues urge cease and desist procedures for private employees.

Objective Consideration of the Merits is Necessary

Once the simplistic classifications and emotional rhetoric has b cleared away, one can objectively examine the potentials of the ce tending procedures. To determine whether court enforcement or ce and desist machinery best protects the rights of all parties involved the proceedings the following issues should be carefully consider

S. 2515 Impairs the Respondent's Due Process Rights

Whereas the court approach preserves the traditional separation powers which we as a nation so highly cherish, the cease and des procedure seriously threatens the respondent's due process rights joining the prosecutorial function with the adjudicatory functi Under a cease and desist proceeding the EEOC would investigate t charge, issue the complaint, prosecute the complaint, adjudicate t merits of the case, and seek enforcement of its decisions in the Uni States Circuit Courts of Appeals. Elemental concepts of fairness a due process require an impartiality in the adjudicatory function wh could not be attained under S. 2515.

What is necessary is aggressive and active advocacy of equal e ployment opportunity at the investigatory and prosecutory lev Court enforcement would utilize this advocacy up through conci tion. If conciliation proves unsuccessful the EEOC would petit the Federal District Courts for redress of the employees' grievanc Thus, the final adjudication would be an impartial judicial decis free from accusation of institutional bias.

Court Enforcement Utilizes the Assets of Both the EEOC and the Judiciary

The court approach combines the expertise of the EEOC in inv tigating, prosecessing, and conciliating unfair employment cases w the expertise and independence of the Federal courts. The Fede courts have developed considerable expertise and a reputation of fa ness in enforcing equal opportunity laws in all other areas of c rights, including public accommodations, voting, education, and ho ing. They have developed specific expertise through vigorous pro tion of Title VII rights. In fiscal 1970 alone, the EEOC filed ami briefs in 167 of the more important Title VII enforcement cases the federal courts. The EEOC recognized the important role the co have played when it concluded in its most recent (5th) Annual Rep that:

> The Commission feels that the course of litigation over the > past year (fiscal year 1970) has been encouraged and that the w has developed in a liberal fashion appropriate to a huanitarian and remedial statute. The implementation of Title II gives hope for the future of all Americans.

Enforcement Provides an Expeditious and Final Remedy

ctive protection of the rights of both the employer and the yee demands a speedy resolution of the dispute. Facts indicate ne court enforcement procedure is more expeditious as it ina one step enforcement procedure whereas the cease and desist requires two steps. A district court order is immediately self-ng as it is backed by court contempt proceedings. A commis-ase and desist order must be brought to the Court of Appeals it achieves similar sanction power. Additionally, there is a defi-vantage in having the judge who enters the original order be son who will hear any subsequent enforcement proceedings. A who is enforcing his own orders rather than those of some com-will be determined that such orders are properly enforced.
large extent, speedy resolution of an unfair employment pracl be determined by the respective caseloads of the EEOC and rict courts. Chairman Brown of the EEOC testified that as of ), 1971, the Commission had a backlog of 32,000 cases with an ated fiscal year 1971 caseload of 32,000 additional cases. Also would expand coverage from the present employers with 25 or mployees to those with 8 or more employees, thereby adding imately 6.5 million potential aggrieved. Additionally, the will be responsible for conciliating disputes of an additional llion State and local government employees pursuant to the Eagleton-Taft amendment. While the present EEOC comlisposition requires from 18 to 24 months, the median time inter-m issue to trial for non jury trials in U.S. district courts in as ten months according to the Annual Report of the Director Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. Congressman Erlen-stified before the Labor Subcommittee that of the 29 District which would receive the brunt of the unfair employment praces from the top ten states in terms of EEOC recommended gation, 21 courts had a medium time of 12 months or less for y trials and 8 courts had a medium time of 6 months or less n jury trial.

ldition, a further impediment to timely action under the admin-e approach is that only the Commission in Washington and not the field attorneys could issue cease and desist orders. The approach offers potential remedies through 398 judges on the n 93 existing federal district courts.

efully, the above discussion will serve to better clarify an issue n the recent past has been the subject of much rhetoric and little rity.

Transfer of "Pattern and Practice" Unjustified ldition to the previously discussed major issue, I am concerned provision of S. 2515 which transfers "pattern and practice" om the jurisdiction of the Justice Department to the EEOC.

The majority has presented no compelling reason for the transfer of than for unification sake—a suspect phobia if not supported by a tional factors. Both the Justice Department and Chairman Br are satisfied with the present administration of "pattern and prac suits. Vesting EEOC with cease and desist powers over what has b a successful litigation process simply compounds the confusion.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF MR. TAFT

eneral I support S. 2515 and believe it can do much to improve ss on opening job opportunities. I do intend to introduce an ment on the Senate floor to provide autonomy for the Office of l Counsel from the Equal Employment Opportunity Commis- believe this approach will insure procedural fairness in the strative operation of the Commission and eliminate some seri- ections to broadened Commission authority. AN ACT

To further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1971".

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (6) of subsection (g) of section 705 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–4(f)(6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to refer matters to the Attorney General with recommendations for intervention in a civil action brought by an aggrieved party under section 706, or for the institution of a civil action by the Attorney General

under section 707, and to recommend institution of appellate proceedings in accordance with subsection (h) of this section, when in the opinion of the Commission such proceedings would be in the public interest, and to advise, consult, and assist the Attorney General in such matters.

(b) Subsection (h) of such section 705 is amended to read as follows:

"(h) Attorneys appointed under this section may, at the direction of the Commission, appear for and represent the Commission in any case in court, provided that the Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court or in the courts of appeals of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by the Commission."

SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (a) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whenever it is charged in writing under oath by a person claiming to be aggrieved, or a written charge has been filed by a member of the Commission where he has reasonable cause to believe a violation of this title has occurred (and such charge sets forth the facts upon which it is based and the person or persons aggrieved) that an employer, employment agency or labor organization has e parties, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding. Any officer or employee of the Commission who shall make publi in any manner whatever any information in violation of this subsection shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,00 or imprisoned not more than one year."

(b) Subsection (d) of section 706 of the Civil Right follows:

"(d) A charge under subsection (a) shall be file within one hundred and eighty days after the alleged unlaw ful employment practice occurred, except that in the case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has followed the procedure set out in subsection (b), such charge shall be filed by the person aggrieved within two hundred and ten days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency. Except as provided in subsections (a) through (d) of this section and in section 707 of this Act, a charge filed hereunder shall be the exclusive remedy of any person claiming to be aggrieved by an unlawful employment practice of an employer, employment agency, or labor organization."

(c) Subsection (e) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) If within thirty days after a charge is filed with the Commission or within thirty days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c), the Commission has been unable to obtain voluntary compliance with this Act, the Commission may bring a civil action against the respondent named in the charge: Provided, That if the Commission fails to obtain voluntary compliance and fails or refuses to institute a civil action against the respondent named in the charge within one hundred and eighty days from the date of the filing of the charge, a civil action may be brought after such failure or refusal within ninety days against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene in such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending the termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (b) or further efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance."

(d) Subsections (f) through (k) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) are redesignated as subsections (g) through (l), respectively, and, in newly designated subsection (k) the reference to subsection (i) is changed to subsection (j), and the following new section is added after section 706(e) thereof:

"(f) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending final disposition of such charge and the court having jurisdiction over such action shall have the authority to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper: Provided, That no temporary restraining order or other preliminary or temporary relief shall be issued absent a showing that substantial and irreparable injury to the aggrieved party will be unavoidable. It shall be the duty of a court having jurisdiction over proceeding under this section to assign cases for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause such cases to be in every way expedited."

(e) Subsection (h) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) as redesignated by this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(h) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice). Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable. No order of the court shall require the admission or reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union or the hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any back pay, if such individual, pursuant to section 706(a) and within the time required by section 706(d), neither filed a charge nor was named in a charge or amendment thereto, or was refused admission, suspended, or expelled or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin or in violation of section 704(a). No order made hereunder shall include back pay or other liability which has accrued more than two years before the filing of a complaint with said court under this title."

AMENDMENT

Intended to be proposed by Mr. GAMBRELL (for himself, Mr. TALMADGE, Mr. BROCK, and Mr. CHILES) to S. 2515, a bill to further promote equal opportunities for American workers, viz: At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. 13. Because of legal and constitutional uncertainties relating to the question of public school student placement as it relates to the desegregation of public schools, and because of the disruption of normal educational operations, the expense, the disorder and divisiveness, and the possibility that certain student placement practices may be declared to be legally unnecessary or unconstitutional, it is the purpose of this section to prohibit and suspend certain student placement practices which have heretofore been implemented by courts, and by departments of the United States Government until the legality and constitutionality of such practices can be more clearly determined. It is also the purpose of this section to require the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, in the distribution of Federal educational assistance, to accept court ordered plans of desegregation as being complete and sufficient to qualify for such assistance without the imposition of further conditions.

(a) Neither the Department of Justice nor the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare shall be authorized to support the assignment or requirement of any public school student to attend a particular school because of his or her race, creed, or color, notwithstanding any other law or laws.

(b) No funds heretofore or hereafter authorized or appropriated by any law to or for the Department of Justice or the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, or otherwise, to be expended, shall be expended to support the assignment or requirement of any public school student to attend a particular school because of his race, creed, or color.

(c) Notwithstanding subsections (a) and (b), and any other law or laws, any plan for desegregation, including plans calling for the transportation of students, required or permitted by any court of the United States to be conducted by any local educational agency within the United States, shall, upon request by such agency, be accepted and approved by the Department of Justice and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare as a complete and sufficient plan for desegregation for the purpose of qualifying for and receiving any assistance under any law of the United States authorizing or requiring the furnishing of Federal assistance, and neither the Department of Justice nor the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare shall deny such assistance to any public educational agency within the United States because of failure of such agency to meet any condition except willful failure to comply with such plan of desegregation.

(d) Notwithstanding any other law or laws, no court of the United States shall have jurisdiction or authority to enforce any order or judgment to the extent that it provides for the assignment or requirement of any public school student to attend a particular school because of his or her race, creed, or color, until appeals in connection with such order or judgment have been exhausted or, in the event no appeals are taken, until the time for such appeals has expired.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—

(1) "Local educational agency" means a public board of education or other public authority legally constituted within a State either for administrative control or direction of, or to perform a service function for, public elementary or secondary schools in a city, county, township, school district,

(g) appropriations Acts heretofore and hereafter relating to such laws.

(f) If any provision of this section or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the section and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

(g) All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith be and the same are hereby repealed.

(h) This section shall take effect upon the date of its enactment, and shall expire at midnight on June 30, 1973.

(i) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall not apply to support furnished to any local educational agency pursuant to the written request of such agency, but this subsection (i) shall permit such support only for the purposes requested by such agency and only until such request shall have been withdrawn.

[From the Congressional Record—Senate, Nov. 1, 1971]

L EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

Acting President pro tempore. Under the previous order, the from Alabama (Mr. Allen) is recognized for 15 minutes.

Allen. Mr. President, on last Friday evening, following the the foreign aid bill to which the Senator from Pennsylvania, inguished minority leader, has referred, the junior Senator abama objected to unanimous consent that S. 2515 be given a setting and that a time limitation be placed on that bill. He at objection, because he felt that there was, and there is, much egislation which should be considered ahead of the EEOC bill, hip notice of October 30, 1971, lists a few of those important : The President's economic tax package, phase I and phase II ls, and so forth; two Supreme Court nominations; the Oki- reaty; voter registration; narcotics; fish inspection proposals; nent of Defense, District of Columbia, and supplemental ap- tions bills.

dy this week there have been set for consideration the Alaska claims bill, the water quality bill, the consumer product y bill, and the military construction appropriation bill; and mewhere between this time and the recess of the Senate over xt year, we will be faced several times, I dare say, with the of the foreign aid bill.

resident, the junior Senator from Alabama not only feels that should not have special consideration, but feels that it should lowest possible priority. In fact, he hopes that it does not for consideration in the U.S. Senate at all.

bill is, in truth one of the most dangerous and most inde- legislative proposals presented in this Chamber in the short ave been in the Senate. We are being asked to endorse a blank ve check to vest in an agency of the Federal Government, ual Employment Opportunity Commission, totalitarian au- over employment practices of free enterprise, labor unions, te and local governments. This bill is deliberately designed to sic rights of the American people and to grant special privi- a few. If enacted, the measure would in fact, cripple, and in stances, destroy the very institutions which brought this Na- o being and helped to make it great.

to discuss briefly a few of the ways in which this bill would nce to our American way of life.

the bill brings within its scope all State and local government es. This is not only an arrogant attempt further to dilute the f the States, their institutions and their sovereignty, but the conclusion is inescapable that the measure is aimed at destroying dual form of government.

If enacted, this bill would permit an agency of the Federal Gov ment and the Federal courts to enter the political field in the appo ment of State and local government employees. It is true that s State and local job requirements are in part unrelated to the But it is wholly in keeping with our political traditions to give State and local leaders, and our national leaders for that matter, discretion to give reasonable weight to factors other than job fit in filling jobs.

Frankly, it is difficult to imagine a more intolerable interferenc the Federal Government with the rights of the States than to dic their employment practices. The States' power over employment p tices is basic and essential to the very existence of State sovereig and, consequently, to our Federal system which was devised by forefathers and which they intended to be held forever sacrosanc the Bill of Rights. If we deprive the States of their basic function is pointless to maintain that we have a dual form of government.

The bill contains a self-starter provision vesting the Commis with the authority to initiate investigations and inquiries, either o own motion or whenever an anonymous person or organization ma requests the filing of a charge that an unlawful employment pra has occurred.

There is no requirement of "reasonable cause" as a condition p cedent to the filing of a charge; therefore, the Commission is g carte blanche authority to conduct roving inquiries into the pri books and records of a company or labor union regardless of whe there is any preexisting cause for believing there has been a viola of the law.

Under the bill, employers, labor unions and State and local gov ments would be subject to the issuance of cease-and-desist orders by Commission. The broad powers sought under the measure repres radical departure from the concept of American jurisprudence and cherished legal system of checks and balances. The legislation seek make the Commissioner accuser, prosecutor, judge, and jury all in

But this is not all. The bill could also punish first and prove offense subsequently. It would permit a Federal judge—a si judge acting without a hearing and without any showing by the G ernment of irreparable injury—to issue a temporary restraining or against the respondent for an alleged unlawful employment prac We thus see a reversal of the age-old maxim that a man is presume be innocent until he is proven guilty.

Under these provisions of the bill, it would be possible, Mr. Pr dent, for an American to be imprisoned if he disagreed with the or of a Federal judge, without the benefit of trial by jury.

The rights which the provisions of S. 2515 seek to deny cannot dismissed as mere legal technicalities. They are rights indispensab freedom. They are rights which distinguish a free society fr tyranny.

Mr. President, S. 2515 does not create one new job. Other than additional army of bureaucrats that would be set up, it does not cr ob in private employment. Yet, it is presented to us when un-nt is consistently ranging in the area of 6 percent. At a time are desperately trying to fight inflation and keep our economy is bill would create fear and uncertainty, friction and divie business houses, plants, and factories of America.

rganizations would be subject to interference and supervision nternal affairs. Their cherished programs of seniority and eship would be destroyed. And the law which tells the em-o his workers shall be today can be reversed and the worker his employer shall be tomorrow—and where and at what esident, there are other sections and purposes of S. 2515 noxious as those I have just discussed. For example, the relating to the appointment of attorneys, attorneys' fees, nplaint expenses of the aggrieved person are shocking.

gislation would also create a vast new bureaucrcy, inas-ne Commission does not now have the manpower, so it says, ut the programs called for under the legislation. I would e some figures presented to the Senate as to how many law-ing examiners, investigators, and supporting staff would o the Commission to enable it to develop and exercise the ial functions under the bill and how much it would cost ers of this country.

sident, this is a force bill, pure, and simple. Its sole purpose legislative sanction to the establishment of percentages or mployment on the basis of race. Some people may think that uirement would never be imposed on business and labor, the patent absurdity involved. Less than a decade ago, how-ea of a racial balance in a public school would have seemed lous to consider. Yet, today we see schoolchildren in the other parts of the country being lugged all over cities and chieve what is considered to be a mathematically satisfacmixture in public schools. The so-called Philadelphia plan, Nixon administration put into effect last year, is a flagrant e provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This represents ve toward racial balance in industry and labor.

President, this bill should not be passed by the U.S. Senate. that would further break down our federal system. It is a would seek to destroy the concept of States' rights. It is ch goes contrary to our Anglo-Saxon principle of justice is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty. It ederal bureaucracy an entirely new field—that is, to control ment practices of State and local governments.
rogant can the Federal Government become, to seek to the employment practices of State and local governments arge the field of operations that it already has in private t, to give itself the power to regulate the employment f employers of as few as eight people and their employees?
not hit just the large companies, the large corporations t the land. It hits small business—small businesses that are survive in these critical times.

Mr. President, this legislation is not needed. It is legislatio should not pass. In this time of economic crisis, should we not make things just a little bit easier for employers and employees at a time when unemployment has risen to 6 percent or above? S we impose this additional burden on employers and employees, labor unions? Because this measure would result in taking ov hiring practices of companies, and the seniority rights that exist labor unions.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Alabama did obje special setting for this bill. He will object to a special setting. H object to any time limitation on the bill, because he expects to be from on a number of occasions if this bill is called up for cons tion in the Senate.

SEC. 4. Because of legal and constitutional uncertainties relating to the question of public school student placement as it relates to the desegregation of public schools, and because of the disruption of normal educational operations, the expense, the disorder, and divisiveness, and the possibility that certain student placement practices may be declared to be legally unnecessary or unconstitutional, it is the purpose of this section to prohibit and suspend certain student placement practices which have heretofore been implemented by courts, and by departments of the United States Government until the legality and constitutionality of such practices can be more clearly determined. It is also the purpose of this section to require the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, in the distribution of Federal educational assistance, to accept court-ordered plans of desegregation as being complete and sufficient to qualify for such assistance without the imposition of further conditions.

Amdt. No. 600

(a) Neither the Department of Justice nor the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare shall be authorized to support the assignment or requirement of any public school student to attend a particular school because of his or her race, creed, or color, notwithstanding any other law or laws.

(b) No funds heretofore or hereafter authorized or appropriated by any law to or for the Department of Justice or the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, or otherwise, to be expended, shall be expended to support the assignment or requirement of any public school student to attend a particular school because of his race, creed, or color.

(c) Notwithstanding subsections (a) and (b), and any other law or laws, any plan for desegregation, including plans calling for the transportation of students, required or permitted by any court of the United States to be conducted by any local educational agency within the United States, shall, upon request by such agency, be accepted and approved by the Department of Justice and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare as a complete and sufficient plan for desegregation for the purpose of qualifying for and receiving any assistance under any law of the United States authorizing or requiring the furnishing of Federal assistance, and neither the Department of Justice nor the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare shall deny such assistance to any public educational agency within the United States because of failure of such agency to meet any condition except willful failure to comply with such plan of desegregation.

(d) Notwithstanding any other law or laws, no court of the United States shall have jurisdiction or authority to enforce any order or judgment to the extent that it provides for the assignment or requirement of any public school student to attend a particular school because of his or her race, creed, or color, until appeals in connection with such order or judgment have been exhausted or, in the event no appeals are taken, until the time for such appeals has expired.

(1) "Local educational agency" means a public board of education or other public authority legally constituted within a State either for administrative control or direction of, or to perform a service function for, public elementary or secondary schools in a city, county, township, school district, or other political subdivision of a State, or such combination of school districts or counties as are recognized in a State as an administrative agency for its public elementary or secondary schools, or a combination of local educational agencies; and includes any other public institution or agency having administrative control and direction of a public elementary or secondary school.

(2) "Support" shall include, but not be limited to—

(a) advocacy both in and out of court;

(b) the preparation of plans for desegregation both in and out of court;

(c) the withholding of funds appropriated for educational purposes because of or contingent upon compliance with a plan for desegregation; and

(d) any other form of action, withholding of action or other conduct;

having as its purpose or effect the inducement of any person or persons, any educational agency or any court, to adopt any plan for desegregation providing for the assignment or requirement of any public school student to attend a particular school because of his race, color, or creed.

(3) The terms "assignment" and "requirement" shall be deemed to include, but not be limited to, individual selection, selection as part of a group, provision for transfer or transportation, or any other form of selection or assignment for school attendance purposes.

(4) The term "public school pupil" shall be deemed to include any pupil, regardless of race, creed, or color who is eligible to or required to attend any form or type of school conducted by any local educational agency within the United States, or any territory thereof.

(5) "Because of" shall mean "solely because of" as well as "partially because of."

(6) "Assistance" shall be deemed to mean any form of assistance, including, but not limited to, money and services.

(7) "Any law of the United States authorizing or requiring the furnishing of Federal assistance" shall include, but not be limited to—

(a) the Education Professions Development Act, part D (20 U.S.C. 1119–1119a);

(b) the Cooperative Research Act (20 U.S.C. 331–332b);

(c) the Civil Rights Act of 1964, title IV (42 U.S.C. 2000c–2000c–9);

(d) the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, section 807 (20 U.S.C. 887);

(e) the Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1967, section 402 (20 U.S.C. 1222);

(f) the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, title II (42 U.S.C. 2781–2837) (under authority delegated to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare); and

(g) appropriations Acts heretofore and hereafter relating to such laws.

(f) If any provision of this section or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the section and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

(g) All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith be and the same are hereby repealed.

(h) This section shall take effect upon the date of its enactment, and shall expire at midnight on June 30, 1973.

(i) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall not apply to support furnished to any local educational agency pursuant to the written request of such agency, but this subsection (i) shall permit such support only for the purposes requested by such agency and only until such request shall have been withdrawn.

MINICK. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Mr. Baker, Mr. r. Buckley, Mr. Ervin, Mr. Fannin, Mr. Hollings, and Mr. introduce for printing and future appropriate consideration ment to S. 2515, the Equal Employment Opportunities En- Act of 1971. Essentially, the amendment strikes all language e Equal Employment Opportunity Commission with cease- powers and substitutes therefor language giving the EEOC bring employment discrimination disputes to Federal court tion.

endment does not affect present bill language which: first, the respondent's rights of due process by requiring a 10- cation of the filing of a Commission charge and a 2-year of back pay liability; second, provides procedures whereby ately 10.1 million State and local government employees and n civil service and postal workers can redress their employ- rimination grievances through Federal district courts; third, he coverage of Commission jurisdiction to those private of eight or more employees: fourth, does not limit ag- ployes to only Title VII remedies or limit class action; and sfers the Justice Department's "pattern and practice" suit on and the Labor Department's Office of Federal Contract ce to the EEOC.

sident, what this amendment would do is to guarantee the of both parties' rights through fair, effective, and expedi- eral court machinery. It would avoid the legendary vicissi- residentially appointed boards and vest adjudicatory power belongs—in impartial judges shielded from political winds ure. Judges who render their decisions in a climate tempered l reflection and supported by a historical judicial inde- influenced only by stare decisis. This amendment permits ssive and active advocacy of equal employment opportunity so necessary at the investigatory and prosecutory levels, yet pres the impartiality of the courts at the adjudicatory level.

Mr. President, effective protection of the rights of all parties demands a speedy resolution of a dispute. A court approach, r than a cease-and-desist procedure, better serves this goal. Only step—a district court order that is immediately self-enforcing backed by the court's contempt powers—is needed. A commis cease-and-desist order, on the other hand, must be brought to a of appeals before it achieves similar sanction powers. Additio the judge who is enforcing his own orders rather than those of commission will be more determined that such orders are obey

The determination of how best to fulfill our national commit to the elimination of all forms of employment discrimination m determined by clear consideration of the alternatives. If the iss examined objectively, I believe my colleagues will agree that a approach provides the best and fairest machinery for providing for the future of all Americans.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the am ment be printed at this point in the Record.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

AKER. Mr. President, when the Senate considers S. 2515, n the remaining days of this session or in the early days of the ill have to make a fundamental decision with respect to the of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. That ital decision is whether enforcement powers should be vested OC itself or in the Federal courts. I, for one, believe strongly authority should be left to the judiciary.

s the most prominent and effective spokesman for such a the able Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) who suc- ated his views on the matter in an article published in the Nation's Business of October 1971. I ask unanimous consent rticle, entitled "Let's Be Fair About Equal Employment," be the Record.

no doubt that the time has come for Congress to provide an enforcement which would give substance to the purposes of the legislation that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

key to reaching this goal is a workable structure that would be fair to yee and employer.

In my opinion, the way to do it is through a plan such as the one passed by ... House.

Under this plan, the Commission would first seek to obtain voluntary ... pliance with the law by specifying immediately the nature of the complain... advising the employer that he was violating the law.

If a satisfactory agreement could not be reached through negotiations in ... manner, the Commission would be free to bring its own direct action against ... employer in a U.S. District Court.

Using established judicial procedures, the Commission could—pending a ... ruling—request a preliminary injunction or temporary restraining order ...

If a court, after hearing the case, decided a violation had occurred, it ... enjoin the employer from engaging in the unlawful practices. The court ... could order whatever relief was considered appropriate, including hiring ... employees, or reinstatment with or without back pay.

There are many reasons why the judicial approach is superior to admini... tive "cease and desist" procedures.

The principal objection to the administrative approach is that it harkens ... to the "Star Chamber" proceedings outlawed in England more than 300 ... ago. That is, the EEOC would, in effect, become investigator, prosecutor, ... judge and judicial review board—all before you ever got to the Court of Ap...

I do not believe this is appropriate for any Executive agency of governm...

Furthermore, as a practical matter, EEOC Chairman William H. Brown ... has told the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare that his agency ... a case backlog of 18 to 24 months. If it is unable to handle the load under ... present arrangement, there seems little likelihood it could begin issuing cease ... desist orders for quite some time.

Chairman Brown estimated it would take almost two years to set up ... trial examiner procedure, and substantial staffing of trial examiners and ... lawyers would be needed to conduct the adjudication procedures before the C... mission itself.

We already have over 90 federal district courts and nearly 400 judges ... those courts.

Under the judicial approach, where there was a legitimate case, the C... mission could take it right into one of those courts—already set up, staffed ... paid for.

Naturally, use of the existing court system would mean more immedi... action than the cease and desist method, which would be more than two ye... down the road, even after a bill had been signed into law.

OTHER WORRIES

And the judicial approach, of course, would bring together and preserve ... the expertise of the EEOC in investigating, processing and conciliating ... employment cases and the expertise and freedom from shifting political winds ... the federal courts.

There are other matters of concern to many businessmen in proposals ... changes in the law.

For example, Chairman Brown indicated in testimony last year that rem... for discriminatory practices should reach back to the effective date of the C... Rights Act—July 2, 1965.

DOING THE JOB—PROPERLY

mary: There is a need to put some teeth into the equal employment

Mr. Carlson, in providing an objective analysis of the es some interesting observations which court enforcement have either failed or refused to consider. Mr. Carlson points nee-jerk liberal reactions" assume that cease and desist will for employees what the NLRB did for unions. This is not so. Mr. Carlson cites Rutgers law professor, Alfred W. 's findings that "minorities have been far more successful heir rights through courts than administrative procedures." Blumrosen, who authored a comprehensive minority em- study, "Black Employment and the Law," found that the resently having fair employment practice commissions with lesist powers "have invariably failed in their own efforts to ob bias through administrative cease-and-desist powers."

How Best To Toughen the EEOC?

(By Elliot Carlson)

ON.—Just about everybody thinks the Equal Employment Oppor- ission needs more teeth.

ars ago, the dean of the Columbia University Law School derided agency as "a poor enfeebled thing . . . (having) the power to con- ot to compel." The 1970 report of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission as almost powerless, slow and saddled with lax administration, high l general inexperience. "We're out to kill an elephant with a fly gun," former EEOC chairman.

present chairman, William Brown III, agrees the commission's weap- lequate. Recently he noted that of 35,445 charges recommended for since 1965, reasonable cause to believe that bias existed was found vo-thirds of the cases. Yet in less than half of these was the EEOC ve a totally or even partially successful conciliation.

There's little agreement, however, on how to strengthen the six-year-old as will be evident today, when proponents of two distinct remedies clash House. Labor and civil rights groups back a Democratic-sponsored bill that give the EEOC the same "cease and desist" powers possessed by the N Labor Relations Board and other federal agencies. Business groups and opponents are rallying behind a Republican-backed alternative that merely empower the agency to go to court to enforce its orders. Conser who would prefer that the EEOC's power not be strengthened have lig behind the Republican version, seeing it as the lesser of two evils.

Most civil rights advocates write off this Republican-backed alternativ predictable move to water down an obviously stronger Democratic approa it's significant that a growing number of scholars strongly committed to rights disagree. They doubt that giving the agency cease and desist au would be either effective or desirable. They think a sort of knee-jerk reac liberals is binding them to the potential inherent in the GOP counterpro

MR. BLUMROSEN'S ARGUMENT

"An awful lot of liberals haven't stopped to think that what they're for isn't appropriate to the problem," avers Alfred W. Blumrosen, a Rutge professor. "They're basing their views on the NLRB experience, and that because the board helped unions get established the EEOC can do the sa civil rights groups. That's not necessarily so."

In his 1971 book, "Black Employment and the Law," (Rutgers Uni Press), Mr. Blumrosen argues that minorities have been far more suc achieving their rights through courts than administrative procedures. H asserts that states have invariably failed in their own efforts to eradic bias through administrative cease and desist powers. (Of 34 states wi employment practice commissions, 32 have such powers.) Others suppo argument.

"I doubt whether cease and desist orders could get at the vestiges of bias than the courts," declares Bernard Anderson, assistant professor of indu the University of Pennsylvania. "It would take years to build up the ga on which to base such orders, but if you had a good case you could be a next week."

Court action is what the Republican-backed bill provides for. Legal e find a few of the measure's provisions disastrous, such as one prohibitin action suits under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. But there's no questi granting the EEOC court enforcement authority would add considerably agency's weapons, now severely limited.

At present, the EEOC may only investigate charges, determine whether sonable cause" exists to indicate the presence of bias, and, if so, attem conciliate. When wrong-doers prove obstinate, it may only recommend th Attorney General institute civil action.

This means that a party can successfully defy the EEOC just by sitting secure in the knowledge that eventually the commission must withdraw a the Justice Department, anxious to conserve its resources, is selective in t it brings, says the EEOC's Mr. Brown. "All that an intransigent respondent to fear," he recently testified before a House committee, "is the unlikely bility that whomever he has discriminated against will take him to court has happened in less than 10% of the cases where our attempts at conc were unsuccessful. . . ."

To many civil-rights advocates, the answer is the Democratic-sponsored ure, which would drastically overhaul the government's entire job bias effort. Indeed, the bill would transfer to the EEOC most federal anti-bia tions, such as the Labor Department's Office of Federal Contract Comp the Attorney General's authority to initiate "pattern or practice of discr tion" suits, and responsibility for overseeing antibias efforts throughout Civil Service. It would also broaden EEOC jurisdiction to include 10.1 state and local government employes.

Perhaps the most important to liberals, the bill would empower the a after it had exhausted conciliation efforts, to issue cease and desist orders discriminatory practices and then to seek enforcement of its orders in courts. "The EEOC must have cease and desist power," Rep. Shirley Chis the Brooklyn Democrat, recently declared. "Just having them will create mode of voluntary compliance and, of course, will provide an additional in instances of intransigence."

eally knows how either this proposal or its Republican alternative in practice. Proponents of cease and desist base their expectations ormance of the NLRB, whose average time for settlement of cases in vas 11 months.

s point out that NLRB cases can remain unresolved for as long as when parties appeal board decisions to the courts. While this happens inority of NLRB litigation, they argue that such appeals would be equent at the EEOC, where the law would be less developed and ore controversial. They claim that aggrieved persons would do better C went first into U.S. district courts, whose median length for non-n 1970 was 10 months. A weakness in this argument, though, is that e courts that would be used the most have the greatest backlogs.
The delay was 35 months for non-jury cases in the Southern District k in 1969, 44 months in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, and 24

A CHANGE IN PHILOSOPHY

fact an agency has cease and desist makes it necessary for labor and t to be concerned with its make-up," Mr. Blumrosen observes. "You'd change in the philosophy of the agency. Its personnel would have il-rights orientation."

rosen argues that it is a fundamental misconception to expect the o for the civil rights movement what the NLRB has done for the nent. This is because the two movements are substantially different.
isparity: "the persistence and staying power of the labor movement of lobbying, pressuring and influencing activity, backed by financial hich have become stable and significant in recent years."

lities, he contends, make labor more effective in dealing with the bu-precisely because it is deficient in them, "the civil-rights movement nuscle at the EEOC. It lacks the staying power to stand up to labor ment in that kind of a contest." Mr. Blumrosen concludes that the movement can best compete in court.

nia's Mr. Anderson contends that most discriminatory treatment is : subtle practices that leave minorities at a disadvantage because and educational differences. He doubts whether such forms of bias abor board, individual cases are decided on individual merits," he ns cease and disist orders fail to create broad legal principles, and ood enough for race questions." Mr. Anderson questions, for instance, such order could ever have had the impact of the Griggs vs. Duke ecision, in which the Supreme Court recently held that employ tests, ly applied, are invalid if they have a discriminatory effect and can't n the basis of business necessity.

roversial, although also hotly debated, are the provisions that would e EEOC virtually all federal job anti-bias efforts. Scattered among a of agencies, such programs often have worked at cross-purposes. Most advocates agree with Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington he NAACP, who snaps, "You don't want a lot of different pots when rying to cook one stew."

EFFECTIVENESS QUESTIONED

ffective an anti-bias superagency would be is questioned by at least ome observers suggest that labor is backing the transfer of the Office Contract Compliance to the EEOC in hopes of weakening it.

They say the OFCC, which has imposed goals and timetables on gover contractors for hiring minorities, could lose this authority if it were transf This could happen, they say, because the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which lished the EEOC, specifically disallows racial-hiring quotas.

According to the conspiratorial theory, labor favors the OFCC's transf the expectation that its "goals and timetables" would conflict with the E ban on quotas, thus depriving the OFCC of its key sanction and, at the same "removing a thorn from labor's side," as one exponent put it.

It's by no means clear, however, that this would be the effect of such a Some courts, for example, have ruled that "goals" aren't necessarily the thing as "quotas." And it's hard to imagine that the OFCC would be less eff at another agency. "How could the OFCC be weaker than it is now?" ask NAACP's Mr. Mitchell.

No doubt, the new powers Congress confers upon the EEOC will profo affect the future course of the civil-rights movement. While most civil-r advocates prefer cease and desist, it's by no means clear that this appr would ultimately prove more effective than merely authorizing the EEOC t courts to enforce its anti-discrimination rulings. As Mr. Blumrosen writes court decision is worth 10 written conciliation agreements and one hundr nual reports of administrative agencies."

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY

LEN. Mr. President, giving emphasis to the rising tide of against the EEOC expansion bill, S. 2515, is a splendid lead which appeared in the Birmingham (Ala.) News of Novem-

"A Dangerous Grab for Power," the editorial cogently that S. 2515 is deliberately designed to subvert the prime Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence that an individual is presumed cent until proven guilty. The legislation would do this, Mr. by lodging in the Equal Employment Opportunity Com- ase-and-desist powers, coupled with the unfettered author- s investigator, prosecutor, judge, and jury, with only limited the courts. I wholeheartedly agree with the wise words of the riter that:

hat agency in a position where it may investigate and file complaints, turn, heat arguments and defense and then rule on the issue is too "hanging jury" to fit the concept of the democratic process.

ion to making an out-and-out mockery of our dedication to s of law, S. 2515 also does violence to other rights and free- h our Founding Fathers and the framers of our Constitu- d indispensable to liberty. For example, S. 2515 would vest OC autocratic and despotic power over the internal admin- f State and local governments. In addition, it encroaches ious and academic freedom by seeking to gain control of the promotion policies of all educational institutions, including pported schools.

sident, I witnessed such a bold and colossal grab for naked s represented by the combined impact of S. 2515.

that the groups and individuals who have been called upon the far-reaching proposals contained in S. 2515 have not full explanation of the fundamental and basic constitu- es which are involved and the threat which this pernicious poses to individual rights, liberties, and freedoms. I do not t fully informed Americans would sponsor or support legis- as S. 2515 which calls for the outright surrender of prin- concepts which are so inseparable from our cherished sys- ocratic government.

A Dangerous Grab for Power

ove to deliver statutory enforcement into the hands of a federal ve agency at the expense of the country's employers is presently be- s.

What this would amount to, if granted, would be to place a federal age the position of being prosecutor, judge and jury in cases where adjudicati rested effectively, until the present, in the federal courts.

The basic effort is known as the Williams Bill (S. 2515), the provisi which would hand over to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commissio and desist powers in the area of employment complaints, similar to that now held by the National Labor Relations Board, a lever that has proved more of an abuse of employers than a protective arm for complainants.

There is no argument heard today that protection against unfair emplo practices is unneeded or that still more stringent enforcement powers sho be given the EEOC. To place that agency in a position where it may inves and file complaints, and then, in turn, hear arguments and defense and the on the issue is too much like a "hanging jury" to fit the concept of the demo process.

The Dominick amendment to the Williams measure provides for initi judication of employment complaints in federal district courts, an area contrary to arguments by proponents of the Williams Bill, is equipped to decisions within a reasonable length of time.

Supporters of the Dominick amendment do not base their arguments desire to thwart the presentations of fair employment opportunities qualified persons regardless of race, sex or creed. The day when job bia be tolerated is past. And it is the duty of Congress, as we see it, to fa legislation which will give appropriate federal agencies the power to fair employment opportunities to all people who are qualified and willi hold a job.

We do not believe, however, that another step in the encroachment of fe bureaucracy, which possesses no greater expertise in this field than courts, is the answer to employment abuses.

The Williams Bill suggests handing government another cudgel to wa the private sector of the nation's economy. The Dominick amendment su a far more conciliatory method and one that will have a more satisfactory for all parties involved.

Progress in the area of job opportunities will not be accomplished expense of equitable treatment for all.

T. Mr. President, many businessmen have expressed the t the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission will be r, prosecutor, and judge. I share the concern that this uld not have all of these powers combined under a cen-hority. For that reason I am today introducing for myself, from Pennsylvania, Mr. Schweiker, and the Senator from Mr. Javits, an amendment to separate the Office of Gen-l so that it can operate autonomously from the remainder nission.

his amendment, the General Counsel of the Commission onomous and shall be appointed by the President, by and vice and consent of the Senate, for a term of 4 years. The unsel shall have full responsibility for the issuance of all the prosecution of such complaints before the Commission duct of litigation.

eliberately separated the investigatory and prosecutory nder this amendment, since I believe that the General ll be able to act far more objectively and dispassionately g these cases if there is a separation of personnel so that nave investigated a case will not be those who will make y decision.

to facilitate the working relationship between the General aff and the EEOC staff in the field, this amendment pro-he chairman shall concur in the appointment of the regional nd the General Counsel shall concur in the appointment of ectors.

hat this provision will go a long way toward avoiding the which otherwise might be present in having a divided staff level. In all other respects, however, the General Counsel's e completely autonomous from that of the Commission.

here will be no misunderstanding of the intent of this , the General Counsel will be able to decide whether or not o bring an action. The only area in which the General ll not have discretion shall be in those instances where the recommends that the General Counsel seek a temporary n court. In such cases the General Counsel shall act. I the discretion of the General Counsel is not required in ces because these cases will be brought in the U.S. Circuit ppeals and consequently these cases do not involve situations where the Commission is able to act as investigator, pros and judge.

In all other situations, the General Counsel will be able to facts independently and decide for himself whether or not he to launch a prosecution and the manner in which that pros shall be handled.

Under this amendment, after the issuance of a complaint, pr ings may be ended by agreement between the General Counsel a respondent upon the approval of the Commission.

If this amendment is adopted, I will be able to support the written. As I stated in my supplemental views to the committee the adoption of this amendment "will insure procedural fair the administrative operation of the Commission and eliminate serious objections to broaden Commission authority." Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR TAFT: This will acknowledge your letter of January which you express your intention to introduce an amendment to S. 25 would create a statutory General Counsel within the organizational fra of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

I know how concerned you have been that the enforcement procedures by the Committee in S. 2515 have the maximum requirement of fairness process for all parties. The approach you suggest has been a part of the Labor Relations Board and has worked successfully for many years. A provision was offered to S. 2453 last year and accepted, and I will rec that the Senate agree to your amendment at the appropriate time in the d It certainly is agreeable to me.

With kind personal regards,
Sincerely,

As we all know, that act declares that it is an unlawful e ment practice to fail or refuse to hire or promote, or to other criminate against a person with respect to his employment b of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. When these vio take place, they cause the loss of economic security and the inab maintain a decent household just as surely as the burglar in the when he steals money, savings, and possessions.

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act established the Equal E ment Opportunity Commission as an independent bipartisan charged with the administration of the act's substantive provis

The act contemplated informal methods of conciliation an suasion as the primary mechanism for obtaining compliance its provisions. Only when a pattern or practice of resistance statute was indicated did it make provision for enforcement Government and then only by the Attorney General. Indiv who failed to receive relief through the Commission were l private lawsuits, an expensive procedure not readily availa most complainants.

Title VII, quite frankly, has not been a notable success. In employment discrimination tended to be viewed as a series o lated and distinguishable events, for the most part due to ill w the part of some identifiable or individual or organization. I thought that a scheme that stressed conciliation rather than pulsory processes would be most appropriate for the resolut this essentially human problem, and that litigation would be sary only on an occasional basis in the event of determined re trance. Unfortunately, this view has not been borne out by t perience of the last 7 years. Not enough is being done to obey and improve the situation. In its first 6 years of experienc Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has received 81,000 actionable charges of which approximately 50 percent plained of discrimination because of race; 30 percent were conc with sex discrimination, with the remainder of the charges in ing discrimination on a basis of national origin or religion.

Furthermore, during each year of the Commission's existen number of charges filed per year has increased. In fiscal year 197 the Commission received 14,129 new charges; in fiscal year 197 number increased to 22,920; and the indications for the curren are that more than 32,000 charges will be filed with the Commis

Compliance reviews and employment surveys continually the same traditional situation. Minority workers—black, Sp surnamed, Oriental or Indian—are relegated to the lowest pa least desirable jobs—if, indeed, they get hired at all. Often, se systems further perpetuate the problem by locking the mi worker into a line of progression that tops out at an hourly far below the highest positions in an all-white line of progress

I think it is useful in illustrating the results of this continue flagrant disregard of the law to examine this unlawful cond it affects the ability of so many members of minority groups country to participate in the economic life of our society.

The statistics are vivid, and I would like to recite just a few more significant results.

In a special report released this year by the Bureau of the C entitled "The Social and Economic Status of Negroes in the e evidence is clear that while some progress has been made ttering the economic position of the Nation's black pop-near a reality. For example, the report shows that the mily income for Negroes in 1970 was $6,279, while the ome for whites during the same period was $10,236. This ap shows that Negroes are still far from reaching their

for the above statement is provided by statistics in the reau report which show that Negroes are concentrated er paying, less prestigious positions in industry and are ecluded from advancement to the higher paid, more these families had incomes of less than $3,000. Both male Spanish-speaking American workers, as has already been

PRESENT LAW, TITLE VII	S. 2515 WILLIAMS ET AL., AS REPORTED TO SENATE (S. REPT. NO. 92-415)	H.R. 1746 (ERLENBORN)
The EEOC's chief responsibilities include the investigation and conciliation of complaints, promulgation of recordkeeping requirements, and participation in a variety of cooperative efforts to further voluntary compliance with the title. (Sec. 705.)		case may be. Second it would amend the provision which permits the EEOC to appoint attorneys to represent it to authorize the Commission to appoint attorneys to handle its litigation in all cases except appeals in the courts of appeals and in the Supreme Court which appeals "shall" be conducted by the Attorney General. Sec. 2.
Enforcement:
EEOC procedures are initiated by filing a charge of unlawful discrimination. The charge must be filed within 90 days after the occurrence of the alleged unlawful employment practice. It must be in writing and under oath and may be filed by either the person claiming to be aggrieved or by a member of the Commission who has reasonable cause to believe that a violation of Title VII has occurred. (Sec. 706(a).)	The bill would rewrite substantial portions of this part of the law in conformity with the fundamental change from an EEOC authorized to effect voluntary compliance to an EEOC empowered to compel compliance with its orders. Thus, the Commission is empowered to prevent persons from engaging in unlawful employment practices as defined above. (Sec. 4(a) "(a)".)	This bill retains the major portion of the administration and enforcement provisions of existing law with a few changes to various subsections which are intended to authorize the EEOC to bring court suits to eliminate unlawful employment discrimination. (Sec. 3.)
Upon receipt of the charge the EEOC is to furnish the accused employer, employment agency or labor organization, as the case may be, with a copy of the complaint and to make an investigation. Charges are required to be kept confidential. (Sec. 706 (a).)		The bill proposes two amendments to the provision dealing with the filing of charges with the EEOC. First, to the present law's requirement that charges set out the facts upon which they are based, the bill would require that the "person or persons aggrieved" be identified. Second, the bill would require that the Commission serve the respondent with a copy of the process in the course of its investigation except in the course of litigation arising under the title. (Sec. 706(a).)

An unlawful employment practice charge may be filed "by or on behalf of a person claiming to be aggrieved" or by an officer or employee of the EEOC. Oath requirement of the Act is not retained. The EEOC must serve the charge upon employers, employment agency, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee (termed respondent) as the case may be. The requirement of existing law that charges filed by a member of the EEOC must be based upon reasonable cause to believe that a violation has occurred is not retained. The charges must be in writing and contain information specified by the EEOC. The EEOC is not to disclose the contents of the charges. The EEOC is required to serve the respondent employer, employment agency, or union, as the case may be, with "notice" that a charge against him has been filed. The notice must specify the date, place, and circumstances of the alleged unlawful employment practice within ten days after the filing of the charge. If after investigating, the EEOC determine that there is no reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, it must dismiss the charge promptly, notifying the parties of its action. Conversely, if the EEOC determines that there is reasonable cause, it is required to correct the unlawful practice by informal methods. The EEOC must make its finding as to reasonable cause as promptly as possible, and, "as far as practicable," within 120 days from the filing of the charge or from the date it can begin to take action as described shortly hereafter. The EEOC must in its determination of reasonable cause accord substantial weight to final findings and orders made by State or local authorities pursuant to their respective laws. Personnel of the EEOC are required to maintain information obtained during the preliminary phase in strict confidence and are prohibited from using it in any subsequent proceeding without the consent of the persons concerned. Breaches of confidentiality may be punished by maximum fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for one year or both. (Sec. 4(a) "(b)".)

In State and localities which have FEP laws applicable to the incident complained of, and that law establishes or authorizes a State or local authority to grant or seek relief from such practice or to institute criminal proceedings with respect thereto,"	Charges alleging commission of an unlawful employment practice in an area subject to State or local anti-discrimination law may be filed with the EEOC, but it must defer acting until passage of 60 days from commencement of proceedings insure against the adoption of onerous requirements by State and local agencies as a means of forestalling Federal proceedings, the Act deems it to be sufficient compliance with the requirement of deference to local authority if the person aggrieved submits a written statement of the facts to such agency by registered mail. If the charge is filed by an EEOC Commissioner, the Commission "before taking any action," must notify the appropriate State or local agency and "upon request," allow it 60 days (120 days in the case of a new agency) to deal with the complaint. However, once the 60 days have passed, the complainant may take his case to the EEOC, regardless of the statue of the case or its outcome at that time. (Sec. 706 (b), (c).)

As previously noted, the charge must be filed within 90 days of the alleged discriminatory practice. If the complainant has pursued the State or local remedy, he may file his charge with the Commission within 210 days after the occurrence of the activity complained of, or 30 days after receipt of notice of termination of the State or local proceedings, whichever is earlier. (Sec. 706(d).)

If attempts at voluntary compliance fail, the EEOC is to notify the complainant.

law. However, if a State or local law requires something more than the filing of a written charge, proceedings thereunder shall be deemed to have commenced at the time a written statement of the facts is sent to the local agency by certified mail. (Sec. 4(a) "(c)".)

An alternate provision is set out to deal with the case of deferring to State or local agencies when the charge is filed by an officer or employee of the Commission. The time period is the same as that authorized when the charge is filed by a person aggrieved or someone in his behalf. The procedure also is the same except that the EEOC must notify its State or local counterpart. (Sec. 4(a) "(d)".)

An unlawful employment practice charge must be filed within 180 days after it has occurred. This contrasts with 90 days authorized under existing law. In cases where the EEOC defers to a State or local agency the charge must be filed within 300 days (the law presently allows 210 in these circumstances) or within 30 days after the person aggrieved receives notice that the State or local agency has terminated proceedings, whichever is earlier. (Sec. 4 (a) "(e)".)

Another two amendments are directed to the provisions of Title VII which set out the time for the filing of charges. The first would extend the allowable time for the filing of an unlawful employment practice charge from 90 to 180 days. The second would make EEOC enforcement the person aggrieved's exclusive remedy save for deferrals to State or local FEP agencies and so called "pattern or practice" actions brought by the Attorney General. (Sec. 3(b).)

Within 30 days of receipt of such notice, a civil action may be brought by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or if such charge was filed by a Commissioner, by a person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the discriminatory practices. If the person aggrieved files suit on his own behalf, the court is authorized to appoint an attorney for him and to discharge him from liability for fees, costs, or security. (Sec. 706(e).)	If the EEOC determines that informal methods cannot produce an acceptable conciliation agreement, it can issue and serve respondent with a complaint stating the facts upon which the alleged unlawful employment practice is based together with notice of an impending hearing. The EEOC's determination in this regard is not subject to judicial review. The hearing may not be held less than 5 days after service of the complaint. An officer or employee of the Commission who files a charge in a case may not participate in the case except as a witness. An alternate procedure is provided where the respondent is a government, government agency, or political subdivision. In that case, if conciliation fails the EEOC would take no further action and would refer the matter to the	As proposed by the bill, the EEOC would be authorized to bring a civil action if, within 30 days from the filing of the charge (or within 30 days of the expiration of the time allowed for complying with the deferral period), it determines that informal methods will not achieve voluntary compliance. However, should the EEOC fail or refuse to bring such proceedings within 180 days following the filing of a charge the person aggrieved has an additional 90 days during which to bring his own action. He may bring his own action in these circumstances without regard to whom filed the initial charge. As is the current practice, the court may appoint an attorney to represent the party aggrieved and discharge him from any and all liability for fees, costs, or security. Similarly,

Respondent has the right to file an answer to the complaint and the EEOC shall whenever reasonable grant him leave to amend it. Respondent and person aggrieved are deemed to be parties and may appear at any stage of the proceedings with or without counsel. The EEOC has discretion to allow persons other than parties to intervene, file briefs, make amicus appearances, etc. All testimony is to be under oath and recorded in writing. To the extent practicable, the EEOC shall conduct its proceedings in accordance with the rules of evidence in U.S. District Courts. (Sec. 4(a)"(g)".)

If the EEOC finds that respondent has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, it shall state its findings of fact and issue and serve the parties with an order requiring the respondent to cease and desist from such unlawful employment practice and take such affirmative action as will effectuate the policies of the Act. An award of back pay is not to exceed that which has accrued more than two years prior to the filing of a charge with EEOC. Interim earnings operate to reduce backpay otherwise allowable. EEOC also may require respond-

	ent to make periodic reports detailing compliance with its order. If EEOC does not find an unlawful employment practice, it shall state its finding, notify respondent, and dismiss the complaint. (Sec. 4(a)"(h)".) After filing the charge but before filing the record in a court, proceedings may be ended by agreement between EEOC and parties and EEOC may at any time, upon reasonable notice, modify or set aside, wholly or partly, any order or finding issued or made by it. An agreement thus approved by the EEOC is enforceable in the courts in keeping with other provisions of this bill. (Sec. 4(a) "(i".) Findings of fact and orders made or issued are to be determined on the record consistent with the requirements of the Administrative procedure Act. (Sec. 4(a) "(j)".).
If an employer, employment agency, or labor organization fails to comply with a court order, the EEOC may institute proceedings to compel compliance. (Sec. 706 (i).) All appeals from a district court judgment are to be made to the courts of appeals. (Sec. 706(j).) Reasonable attorney's fees are authorized as an element of costs. Although neither the EEOC nor the United States is eligible to receive attorney's fees, they are liable for such costs the same as a private [illegible] in 60 days after service of the order. Review of such an order may be had in the court of appeals having jurisdiction over the place where the act complained of occurred or where respondent resides or transacts business. A copy of the petition is to be sent to the EEOC and to all other parties to the administrative proceedings and the EEOC, in turn, is to file a copy of the record of its proceedings with the court in accordance with 28 U.S.C. 2112. Upon filing of the petition, the court acquires jurisdiction and may issue such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper and enter on the record a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or wholly or partly setting aside the EEOC order. Intervention by parties before EEOC is authorized. The filing of a petition for judicial review does not stay the contested order unless the court directs otherwise. Objections not urged before EEOC, its members or agents shall not be considered by the court except in extraordinary circumstances. EEOC findings on questions of fact are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence on the whole record. The court may direct the EEOC to take additional evidence upon a satisfactory showing that such evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failing to adduce it earlier. The record thereafter may be modified in accordance with any evidence so turned up. Upon the filing of the record with the court, its jurisdiction shall be exclusive and its degree final except that it may be reviewed by the Supreme Court. The courts are urged to handle expeditiously all matters related to equal opportunity enforcement proceedings. (Sec. 4(a) "(k)".)

	The EEOC may petition the courts of appeals for enforcement of its orders and appropriate temporary relief or restraining orders. Procedures are the same as those authorized in connection with review of EEOC orders. (Sec. 4(a) "(1)".)
	If a petition for judicial review of an EEOC order is not timely filed (within 60 days after service of the order) the findings of fact together with the order become conclusive in any action by the EEOC to enforce the same. Upon the filing of a petition for enforcement by the EEOC in these circumstances, the clerk of the court of appeals is to enter a decree enforcing the order and to transmit copies of the decree to the EEOC and the [illegible] view it nor the EEOC has moved for its enforcement. Here also, findings of fact and the order are deemed to be conclusive and the clerk of the court is to enter a decree enforcing the order and to transmit copies of the decree to the EEOC and the parties. (Sec. 4(a) "(n)".)

The EEOC's attorneys are authorized to conduct all litigation involving the Commission except in the Supreme Court. Litigation involving the Commission in the high court is to be conducted by the Attorney General. (Sec. 4(a) "(o)".)

If, after the filing of a charge, the EEOC's preliminary investigation leads it to conclude that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve its power to grant effective relief, it may bring an action for appropriate temporary or permanent relief in U.S. District Court for the district where the unlawful employment practice was allegedly committed or in the district where the aggrieved person would have been employed, or, as a final resort in the district where the respondent had his principal office. Accordingly, the district court in its discretion may grant injunctive relief or temporary restraining order subject to Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (Sec. 4(a) "(p)".)

The occurrence of either one of two circumstances enables the person aggrieved to bring a civil action to obtain relief from an alleged unlawful employment practice. First, such an action may be brought within 60 days of receipt of notification from the EEOC that it has dismissed the charge. Second, such an action may be brought if the EEOC fails to act on a charge within 180 days of its filing (or such time as required to defer to State or local law). The commencement of a civil action pursuant to these provisions divest the EEOC, or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, of any jurisdiction in the case. However, the court, in its discretion, may allow the EEOC to intervene in any private suit which the EEOC, or Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision certifies to be of "general public importance." (Sec. 4(a) "(q)(1)".) Similarly, the right to bring a private action is terminated when the EEOC either issues a complaint or enters into a conciliation agreement which is agreeable to it and the person aggrieved. The right of an aggrieved person to bring a private action would terminate if the Attorney General files suit under section 706(f). The party if the EEOC shows that it has been acting with due diligence, that it expects to issue an order within a reasonable time, that the case is exceptional, and the extension of its jurisdiction is warranted. (sec. 4(a)"(q)(2)".)

Retains provision of existing law with language making it clear that the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant "such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper." (Sec. 4(c).)

The Federal district courts have jurisdiction to try job bias suits authorized by this act. Proper venue lies with the judicial district in the State in which the practice occurred, in the district in which the relevant employment records are kept, or in the district in which the plaintiff would have been employed but for the alleged discrimination. In the rare case where the respondent cannot be served in any of these districts, suit may be brought in the district of his principal office. (Sec. 706(f).)

If the court finds an intentional violation, it may enjoin the respondent from engaging in further violations and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate. Appropriate forms of relief include reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay, but interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. The court cannot, however, require the admission or

Retains provisions of existing law.

The bill conditions the grant of relief in two particulars not found in the current law. First, the court may not grant any relief with respect to any person who neither has filed a charge nor had a charge filed on his behalf. Second, the court is prohibited from ordering backpay or other liability which accrued more than two years before the filing of the complaint. (Sec. 3(e).)

reinstatement or promotion of an individual as a member of a union or the hiring, reinstatement or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any backpay, if he was refused admission, suspended, or expelled, or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, or for participation in an investigation, proceding, or hearing designed to eliminate discrimination. (Sec. 706(g).)
		The bill would add a new provision which would authorize the EEOC to seek judicial aid as may be needed pending final administrative proceedings in connection with an unlawful employment practice charge. The courts are directed to expedite the handling of this and all other litigation brought by the EEOC. However, before the court may grant any form of temporary, interim relief, the EEOC would be required to show that absent such relief "substantial and irreparable injury to the aggrieved party will be unavoidable." (Sec. 3(g).)

President in the exercise of his Reorganization Act authority. All "personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations and other funds employed, used, held, available, or to be made available in this connection" are to be transferred to the EEOC. During the transfer period, "proceedings shall continue without abatement, all court order and decrees shall remain in effect, and the EEOC will be substituted as a party for the United States Attorney General, as the case may be." After passage of this bill, the EEOC will investigate "'pattern or practice" charges filed by or on behalf of a person or by a Commissioner. Proceedings in "pattern or practice" suits are to be the same as those authorized for judicial review of and enforcement of EEOC orders. (Sec. 5.)

Investigations, inspections, records, State agencies:

Title VII grants the EEOC access to and the right to copy evidence of a person being proceeded against or investigated. The right to copy is strictly limited to evidence that relates to unfair employment practices as defined above, and that is relevant to the charge under investigation by the EEOC. (Sec. 709(a).)

REPT. NO. 92-415), AND H.R. 1746 (ERLENBORN) 92D CONG., 1ST SESS., PASSED BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SEPT. 16, 1971—Continued

PRESENT LAW, TITLE VII	S. 2515 WILLIAMS ET AL., AS REPORTED TO SENATE (S. REPT. NO. 92-415)	H.R. 1746 (ERLENBORN)
The EEOC is authorized to utilize the services of State and local agencies, and with their consent, and reimburse them for services rendered to assist the Commission in carrying out the provisions of this title. In addition the EEOC is authorized to enter into agreements with State and local agencies relinquishing the Commission's concurrent jurisdiction over such classes of cases as may be specified therein. (Sec. 709(b).)	The bill would enlarge the EEOC's present authority to utilize the services of State and local agencies, and to reimburse them for services rendered by way of assisting it to carry out its responsibilities. As amended by this bill, the EEOC would be permitted, inter alia, to contribute to research and other projects of mutual interest. Payments in advance as well as by reimbursement are authorized. (Sec. 6(a) "(b)".)
The EEOC is authorized to impose record-keeping and reporting requirements on employers, employment agencies, and labor organizations subject to the Act. Similarly, covered persons and organizations are required to maintain records including, but not limited to, a list of applicants who wish to participate in apprenticeship and other training programs, the chronological order in which applications are received, and a detailed description of the manner in which participants are selected. (Sec. 709(c).)	The bill would keep the recordkeeping requirements of the Act intact except that the provision allowing for modification in certain hardship situations is altered so as to permit persons or organizations experiencing hardship to petition the courts for relief after having exhausted all administrative avenues for such relief. (Sec. 6(a) "(c)".)
If an employer, employment agency, or labor organization is subject to a State or local FEP regulation, it is not subject to [illegible]	In place of the provision to Title VII which permits modification of recordkeeping requirements where similar or related [illegible]

tion that such agencies maintain confidentiality of material prior to the commencement of its proceedings. Disclosures in violation of this condition constitute grounds for refusing to honor future requests (Sec. 6(a) "(d)".)

Another exemption from the record-keeping requirements is authorized in the case of Government contractors who are subject to the reporting requirements of Executive Order 11246, as amended, which governs employment practices by contractors and subcontractors on federal projects or federally assisted projects. (Sec. 709 (d).)

EEOC officials and employees are prohibited from disclosing any information obtained during an investigation. This prohibition carries a maximum fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for one year (Sec. 709 (e).)

The bill would add a new provision authorizing the EEOC or the Attorney General to require any person having custody of records or papers kept pursuant to the law to make them available for inspection or copying. The district court having jurisdiction over the place where the demand is made may be petitioned for purposes of compelling production of such records or papers. (Sec. 6(b) "(e)".)

PRESENT LAW, TITLE VII	S. 2515 WILLIAMS ET AL., AS REPORTED TO SENATE (S. REPT. NO. 92-415)	H.R. 1746 (ERLENBORN)
"The Commission shall have authority to examine witnesses under oath and to require the production of documentary evidence relevant or material to the charge under investigation." It may "demand" (1) the right to examine and copy evidence in the possession or control of the respondent, (2) production of such evidence, and (3) the testimony of a witness under oath. If such a "demand" is not complied with, the EEOC may seek court enforcement of its "demand". It cannot require the attendance of a witness outside the State where he is found, resides, or transacts business, or the production of evidence outside the State where it is kept. (Sec. 710(a), (b).) Anyone served with a "demand" for access to or the production of evidence by the EEOC has 20 days in which to object. A petition for relief from a Commission "demand" must specify each ground upon which the petitioner seeks relief, but objections not raised within a 20-day period cannot be raised in defense to a proceeding to enforce the "demand", in the absence of special circumstances. (Sec. 710 (c).)	The bill would revise the provisions of existing law relating to investigations by incorporating the provision of section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 161). Accordingly, the EEOC would have access to and the right to copy relevant evidence of a person under investigation or party to a proceeding. It shall issue subpoenas to require the appearance of witnesses or the production of evidence upon application of a party to a proceeding. Any objection to a subpoena on grounds that the evidence sought is not relevant, must be made within five days of its being served. The attendance of a witness or the production of evidence may be required from any place in the U.S. or U.S. possessions and the Federal courts may be petitioned to compel compliance with a subpoena. Witnesses may not refuse to comply with a subpoena on self-incrimination grounds, but may not be proceeded against on the basis of evidence obtained from him. Complaints and all other forms of process may be served personally or by registered mail or telegraph, or by leaving a copy at the principal office for the person being served. No subpoena shall be issued on the application of any party to the proceed-other relevant information. Willful violations of the posting requirements carry a fine of not more than $100 for each offense. (Sec. 711.)

Veterans' preference: Title VII makes clear that it does not repeal or modify any Federal, State, territorial or local law creating special rights for veterans. (Sec. 712.)	Retains provisions of existing law.	Retains provisions of existing law.
Rules and regulations: The EEOC is empowered to issue, amend, or rescind suitable procedural regulations to carry out its functions. Such regulations must be in conformity with the standards and limitations of the Administrative Procedures Act. (Sec. 713(a).)	Retains provisions of existing law.	Retains provisions of existing law.
In any action or proceeding based upon an alleged unlawful employment practice, no person will be subject to any liability or punishment because of the commission of an unlawful employment practice if he shows that the act complained of is in good faith, in conformity with, or in reliance upon a written interpretation of the EEOC. No such person will be subject to any liability or punishment because of his failure to publish or file such information in good faith in conformity with instructions of the EEOC. These good faith defenses are effective even though the interpretation or opinion in question is modified or rescinded or is determined by judicial authority to be invalid and even though, after publishing or filing, it is determined by judicial authority not to be in conformity with the provisions of Title VII. (Sec. 713(b).)	The bill would amend the EEOC's rulemaking authority to authorize it, except in specified instances, to delegate its powers with respect to investigating, conciliating, hearing, determining, ordering, certifying, reporting, etc. Exemptions from this broad authority to delegate include the power to issue cease and desist orders, the power to modify or set aside its findings, the power to make rules of general applicability, the power to enter to rescind agreements with the State and local nondiscrimination agencies whereby it refrains from processing a charge in any case or cases or to relieve certain persons from recordkeeping requirements; however, it is not given authority to provide for conduct of hearings by other than hearing officers as specified in 5 U.S.C. 556. The EEOC may delegate to three or more of its members all of its power. The bill also would extend criminal safe-

complete study of the problem of age discrimination in employment and to report to Congress thereon by June 30, 1965. In its place the bill would add a new provision transferring to the EEOC all functions relating to contract compliance conferred upon the Secretary of Labor by Executive Order 11246, as amended, together with necessary personnel, property, records, and unexpended balances. (Sec. 10.)

A new section would be added to the Act dealing with non-discrimination in employment by the federal government.

All personnel actions of the U.S. Government and in the U.S. Postal Service and Postal Rate Commission in the D.C. government affecting employees or applicants for employment are to be free of discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. Aliens employed abroad are excluded from these provisions.

The Committee report gives the Civil Service Commission authority to enforce these provisions. The CSC may remedy violations by awarding back pay for applicants as well as employees, denied promotion opportunities, reinstatement, hire, immediate promotion and any other remedy needed to carry out the purposes of this section. The CSC is authorized to issue appropriate rules and regulations.

	It also is charged with mailing annual reviews of national and regional equal employment opportunity plans and conducting reviews and evaluations of all agency equal opportunity programs. Agency and department heads of the executive branch and D.C. officials are required to comply with rules and regulations issued pursuant to this section, to submit an annual equal employment opportunity plan, and to notify any employee or applicant of any final action taken filed by him.
	Provisions of 706(q) through (w.) applicable to private actions by aggrieved persons are made applicable to U.S. government workers and applicants for Federal employment. Both would be authorized to file a civil action within 30 days of notice of final action on their complaints or, alternatively, after 180 days from the filing of an initial charge, or an appeal with the EEOC.
	A final subsection makes clear that nothing in this bill, if adopted, would relieve any governmental agency or official of his duty not to discriminate as spelled out in the Constitution, statutes or Executive

Miscellaneous. Title VII provides that "nothing in this title shall be deemed to exempt or relieve any person from liability, duty, penalty, or punishment provided by any present or future law of any State or political subdivision of a State, other than any such law which purports to require or permit doing any act which would be an unlawful employment practice under this title." (Sec. 708.)	Retain provision of existing law.	Retains provisions of existing law.
Nothing in Title VII requires that preferential treatment is to be given to any individual or group on account of an imbalance that may exist with respect to the total number of persons of any race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in comparison with the total number or percentage of persons in that or any other community. This provision applies to the admission to apprenticeship or other training programs as well as hiring by employers, referrals or classifications by employment agencies, and admission to union membership. (Sec. 703(j).)	Retains provisions of existing law.	Retains provisions of existing law.
	The bill adds a provision which makes it clear that the new enforcement authority conferred hereby is not to apply to charges filed before this bill becomes law. (Sec. 13.)

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Carolina.
Mr. ERVIN. As I understand this bill, after the lapse of a year its enactment, the Commission would undertake to supervise the h

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, that is not exactly what the bill provid

Mr. ERVIN. The Commission would have the power to deter whether there was discrimination, and then to tell the States tha man or the woman?

Mr. WILLIAMS. As the Senator knows, under the procedures vided in the bill, the Equal Employment Opportunity Comm would first be required to wait upon State action. I believe that the States have comparable provisions in State law providing fo forcement of the general prohibition against discrimination in public and private employment.
Obviously, as the Senator knows, discrimination in employme government at any level is prohibited. The State law specifically vides for enforcement of that in 26 States.
Mr. ERVIN. But the 22 States that do not have any State law to effect——
Mr. WILLIAMS. On the question of enforcement in State and government employment, the answer, as I understand it, is Whether that is precisely the number, there are a number of S

Mr. ERVIN. As I understand the measure, it would apply to all S officials who had the power to hire people. Would the Commission example, whom he should hire as a secretary?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The answer is clearly no.
Mr. ERVIN. Well, if the Commissioner found that the Gover North Carolina preferred to hire a secretary of his own race, w the Commission not have the right to compel him to hire a secreta

Mr. WILLIAMS. This bill would provide that he could not discrim

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator referred to a secretary. Is this a ca position that the Senator is referring to?
Mr. ERVIN. No, a secretary that takes dictation from the Gover
Mr. WILLIAMS. I see. I refer the Senator from North Carolina to A question was raised in the Committee concerning the application of Tit LIAMS. That is right.

IN. So under this bill a Federal agency would have the t thought there was any discrimination on account of race, ional origin, to tell the University of North Carolina whom hire as a professor of philosophy, would it not?

Mr. ERVIN. The Senate has involved itself in that, and Con

The Senator shifted gears on me, from matrimony into housing.

Mr. ERVIN. I brought out the point to show that every one discriminates every day in all the relationships of life. We dis nate when we decide to walk along the right side of the street in of the left side, because that is the exercise of a preference.

Under this bill the Governor of a State, which was at one alleged to be sovereign, cannot even exercise this own preferen employing his secretaries, without running the risk of being h into a Federal court by the Department of Justice, and having Federal court tell him who he has to hire. I think it is rather d make a final judgment; but before that final judgment is made, they go in to persuade, if a certain practice has been g which is violative of State law. Is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is basically correct.

Mr. MONTOYA. So, up to that point, there is no mandate fr Federal Commission. The Federal Commission has no autho step in unless there is substantial evidence that the State law h violated by a State official with respect to the employment of dividual.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right. That pertains in 26 States. New is one of those States.

Mr. ERVIN. I say this with all due respect to the Senator fro Mexico. The way I read the bill is that it applies to all 50 States Union regardless of whether they have a State law on the sub

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not inconsistent with what the Senato

Mr. ERVIN. Oh, yes. He said that the bill did not apply to that did not have the State law.

Mr. MONTOYA. Let me read the particular provision, on pa

The condition in that particular position is that the State mu a law prohibiting such practices.

Mr. ERVIN. I hate to disagree with my good and genial frien

Mr. Ervin. I have no difficulty finding the provision that

Also on the next page, page 33, subsection (b), it brings all St political subdivisions of States under the bill by omitting the of the 1964 act which exempted States and political subdiv

Mr. Williams. The Senator could put it in the context of t

Mr. Ervin. We have a proposed constitutional amendment p

If they prefer Carolinian to teach that history course rather than someone alia, they would be subject to being hailed into the Federal being told by the Federal judge that they would have to ustralian rather than the North Carolinian, would they not?

LIAMS. I should have referred to a section in the current did not refer to in our earlier discussion. Section 703(c) in a different way, really. The Senator suggested that a not hired, because of his national origin.

There can be a preference in employment where that was a

Most of the members of such commissions are crusaders.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is a crusader? How does the Sen crusader?

Mr. ERVIN. They are necessarily so. The Commission is tor; it is an agency which can prefer the charge. It can p charge, it can act as a jury and determine the facts in con
the charge, and be the judge and executioner.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is an alliteration and it sounds lik out of the theater, but it is not the case.

As I explained to the Senator, the Commission refers t local government, and it goes to a district court.

Mr. ERVIN. That is only where the proceeding is against but in the case of a private employer, the Commission ca

Mr. WILLIAMS. We are not dealing with governments no

Mr. ERVIN. No, I am now discussing private employers. It jury, and judge in one agency. The Supreme Court has had to say in this regard:

More fundamental, however, was the purpose to curtail and chan

I say that no agency should ever be both the prosecuto judge. I say it is incompatible with fair play and it should incompatible with due process of law, because if a man charge against me and prosecutes me, and he will be prone t me guilty. The accused has a poor chance of ever having cence established. So I think that this combining of the prosecutor and judge in the same agency is a prostitutio judicial process.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the situation were as the Senator has after this becomes law I would feel somewhat as the Sena North Carolina does, but even the bill as first introduced separation of functions. But this bill, after it is finally co here, will have, in my judgment, all of the separation of f and powers that the Senator is addressing himself to.

Before the Senator came into the Chamber I indicated for t mittee that an amendment would be offered by the Senator fr creating the Office of General Counsel. That will more certai prosecutions. These will be separated and it will not be o

Mr. ERVIN. They can prefer charges?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

N. That is about as separate as the Siamese twins were.

LIAMS. The General Counsel would, as in other agencies, dependent evaluation for prosecution.

IN. Would it prohibit an officer or agent from prosecuting ? I refer to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

LIAMS. I am sorry. I missed the question.

IN. Would the amendment to be offered by the Senator forbid an officer or agent to prosecute a charge?

LIAMS. As I understand it, the answer to that, if I under- proposed amendments that will be offered, and if I under- uestion, the answer is he cannot prosecute the charge.

N. Can he prefer a change?

LIAMS. Prefer, yes.

N. And still the members of the Commission are going to e trial.

IAMS. He will not be in the trial.

N. General Counsel will bring the proceeding, but the same n whose agents prefer the charge will be the judge and ot the prosecutor, but the judge and the jury.

LIAMS. That is why we are separating these functions.

N. It is comparable to having the prosecuting attorney, the charge or the grand jury that returns the bill of in- tting on the bench to determine the validity of the bill of So the divorce is not enough.

IAMS. Let me stay with this analogy. I hope the respondent ith him an attorney more than a defendant can have in a There is a record of this. When it comes to a record, the d goes to the Court of Appeals and, if necessary, to the ourt of the United States.

N. Yes, it does, but there is a provision in the bill that if the the Commission are supported by substantial evidence— ut may be substantial—they are binding on the courts and do anything about it. If I can write the verdict, I do not care who writes the judgment: the findings of fact determine of judgment which must be written.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think we are talking about the time-hono of "substantial evidence." This is time-honored. I always thou term was better than "weight of the evidence." "Substantial." is better than "weight of the evidence."

Mr. ERVIN. Oh, no. "Substantial" is any part of it. Five per be substantial, but it takes a little over 50 percent of the co force of the testimony to be the weight of the evidence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I always thought it was a little more than thought it was the bulk.

Mr. ERVIN. I remember a number of decisions which Federal have written in which they stated, "If I had the power to find t in this case, I would find the facts exactly opposite from thos by the board, but I am powerless."

So you can take 5 percent of the evidence and that may con matter, and no power on earth can correct that finding of fact, it is binding on the courts. That is one reason why we ought jury trials in all cases.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, and we have our anxious moments before

Mr. ERVIN. Yes, but you have 12 impartial men. The jury is with ascertaining the truth between two conflicting sides, and is not charged with enforcing the law, except to do justice and the facts. Here you have this very agency which is charged w

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am grateful to the Senator from sylvania for yielding to me so that I may make my opening sta with respect to this measure, with which I have been very i involved, as I am the ranking minority member of the Comm Labor and Public Welfare, which has reported the measure floor.

Mr. President, I fully support S. 2515 as reported out by the mittee on Labor and Public Welfare. This is a landmark m an effort to bring up to date the historic Civil Rights Act of 19

S. 2515 is a piece of unfinished national business which ha before us several times in past years. A similar bill passed the S during the last Congress, only to die in the House Rules Co and in 1966 a similar bill passed the House of Representatives to die in the Senate. We are now, however, finally at the point both the House and the Senate can both act during the same Co for during the first session of this Congress the House pas EEOC bill. It is now up to the Senate to act on S. 2515 to s stage for a conference report and final enactment into law.

Mr. President, it is well known that throughout my service Senate I have been devoted to the issue of equal opportunity have stayed with that interest in many measures and through struggles waged here and outside of this Chamber. I feel tha sense, this bill is the capstone of everything I have done in Co in the civil rights field.

I come from a State which has a number of large cities, part New York City. I am a slum child myself, having been born and in the slums of New York City. I think I understand what the members of minorities and the poor, and those who are o badly used in our society, have a failing of incentive. We ne they will move forward into the normal ranks of aspiring an American society and there is nothing that is more importa employment to achieve that result. Indeed employment is, judgment, the very key to the whole problem that we still face country, the most critical kind of emergency in respect of our re with minorities, and especially the black minority of the ritical element, whether we will or will not be successful or ountry will be torn with strife, as it has been in the recent yment.

o has a job and a little money in his pocket is capable of etter housing, emergence from the slums, participation, ional opportunity, a cessation of the rates of dependence encies, including brushes with the law; but a man who e that kind of substance and status is a man who is not ut also adrift, and it is the root of all our troubles.
ze this because it is critically important that we unders the bill now reads, to centralize the administration of

ENFORCEMENT POWER FOR THE EEOC

II of the Civil Rights Act the Congress guaranteed to architect of the bill in this Chamber was Senator Everett llinois, the minority leader. I believe history will both mpromise which had to be made and will not be unfair irksen. He followed what he thought were his deepest ill would not have passed or would not have been possible him. There are many sections or parts of the bill which critical to the achievement of social justice in the United dherence to the Constitution, but, even with respect to ment, the door was opened, albeit not as wide as I should say is not in any way derogating from the historic per-Senator Dirksen in bringing about enactment. I think he important single personality who had most to do with the Civil Rights Act of 1964, notwithstanding my feeling njustice and deficiency remained with respect to the enforcement machinery for equal employment opportunity.

compromise fashioned in 1964 and embodied in present ommission is not successful in inducing voluntary com-the act, it is up to the person who is the subject of the crimination to institute his own lawsuit against the nion guilty of violating the law, unless it can be shown that a pattern or practice of discrimination exists, in which Justice Department has the power to sue.

The purpose of S. 2515 is to remedy this wide gap in the Civ Act of 1964 to granting to the Equal Employment Opportun mission the power to issue administrative cease-and-desist orde lar to those issued by other administrative agencies, such National Labor Relations Board.

When the 1964 act was under consideration, I and a nu other Senators were convinced that a governmental agency w form of enforcement power was absolutely necessary to g the fulfillment of the basic rights created by Title VII of the we had to accept the emasculation of the Commission's power sary to secure the votes needed for cloture.

This is not very new. We tried to get it done in 1964. We k experience would be that of deprivation as a result of our fa have that remedy. As I said, we had to compromise in orde a law. We did, and I am glad we did it. I hope now, given the tunity to pass the bill, we repair what was so lacking then.

Sadly enough, experience under Title VII to date has borne concerns. Conciliation alone has not succeeded in ending dis tory employment practices, nor does it show any reasonable of doing so.

The failure of the conciliation approach was strongly emp by many witnesses who testified before the committee. M William H. Brown III, present Chairman of the Commiss failure of the conciliation approach is summarized very well 5 of the committee report as follows:

> The failure of the voluntary conciliation approach is reflected in the EEOC workload statistics presented by its Chairman, William H. Br Since its inception, the Commission has received 81,000 charges. Of thes the Commission has been able to achieve a totally, or even partially sa conciliation in less than half. This means that in a significant numbe the aggrieved individual was not able to achieve any satisfactory s of his claim through the EEOC, and was forced to either give up his cl or, if the necessary funds and time were available, to pursue the cas the Federal courts.
> While the above noted number of charges is disturbing by its very s comes even more significant when considered in light of the fact that the number of charges filed with the Commission continues to in example, in FY 1970, 14,129 charges were filed with EEOC; in FY 1 number increased to 22,920 charges; and current estimates submitte Commission indicate that more than 32,000 charges will be filed i It is obvious that without effective enforcement powers, the EEOC w little more than a receptacle for charges of violations of Title VII, and ever increasing number of aggrieved individuals will be left without an remedy for violations which are clearly prohibited by the law.

Another indication of the need to give the Commission enforcement power is the statistical evidence of the disparate ment situation faced by women and members of minority throughout the Nation. For example, during 1970 the unemp rate for whites was 5.4 percent, while unemployment rate for was 6.3 percent. Similarly, in 1969 while the overall unemp rate was 3.5 percent, unemployment for Spanish speaking p 6 percent.

Insofar as women are concerned, the evidence indicates that the Equal Pay Act and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act still paid less than men for doing the same job. Thus, edian salary for all scientists was $13,200, for women was $10,000.

ean to imply that Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act ffect. Some of the successful lawsuits brought by private l the Justice Department under its pattern-or-practice ve resulted in important and far-reaching changes in the the employers or unions involved. Equally important, such lawsuits and the general change in social attitudes he country have resulted in the end of many of the and overtly discriminatory hiring practices which at ted throughout American industry. But this does not mean nent discrimination has ended; rather, it means that ances it has become more sophisticated and subtle. In- ply, as attention turns away from entry level jobs to the promotions and highest management positions, where necessity are much more subjective, proving actual dis- becomes more and more difficult.

bstantial agreement on the need to put teeth into Title ing the Commission some sort of enforcement power. The ally before us is what kind of enforcement power shall

I was a party to the enactment uinn bill in New York, the first antidiscrimination statute imination in employment, in 1945, when I first got out We heard the same predictions then—that there would upon thousands of cases of terrible harassment, the business to operate at all, and so forth, and so forth. g happened. traditional arguments usually advanced to justify the e order approach are fully applicable to the EEOC. Thus, ly a need for uniformity in decisions under Title VII le decisionmaking agency can much better insure—at e Supreme Court decides a number of cases—than the eral courts can. There is also a great need for expertise g and applying the provisions of Title VII which only agency can insure. For example, one of the most critical Title VII is testing of applicants for employment.

Whether or not a given test is appropriate in a given case difficult psychological and sociological issues, as well as difficu lems in the analysis of job content and personnel policy. The sion has already initiated important work in this area, but administration's proposal it will have to educate not only its every Federal judge in the country on the proper resolution issues.

There is also the question of speed in case handling. While that the Commission now has a large backlog of cases. Its ca certainly no worse than that in some of our busier district co committee bill includes provisions encouraging the Commissio pose of cases within 6 months; that figure will rarely, if eve tained in Federal district courts.

Insofar as the question of fairness is concerned, some of t support a court enforcement approach seem to argue that the trative process is somehow inherently unfair and that the that due process can be obtained is through trials in the distr I cannot accept that premise. In the first place, the Admi Procedures Act, as well as various specific provisions of S. 25 antee procedural due process for all parties to Commission ings. Under the APA and the bill, all parties will have the ri represented by counsel, to examine and cross-examine wit have a hearing conducted by an independent trial examiner. Second, as a further safeguard for procedural due process, t shortly be offered an amendment, which I understand is acce the chairman of the committee, to provide for an independent Counsel. This will serve to guarantee the separation of pros and decisional functions within the Commission, which the A quires. The adoption of this amendment should completely a remaining fears that employers, or anyone else for that mat not receive the fullest possible due process in proceedings b Commission.

For these reasons, I support the granting of cease-and-desi to the EEOC, as S. 2515 does, and shall oppose the amend permit direct court enforcement.

EXPANSION OF COVERAGE—EMPLOYEES OF STATE AND LOCAL GOVE

Mr. President, I wish to address myself briefly now to the sirable changes in existing law, to wit, the expansion of co employers with eight or more employees, thereby materially the present requirement and reaching more of small busines in fact, is somewhat more likely, if anything, because of the of the enterprises and the lack of sophisticated personnel to to be in danger of discriminating than even larger busines whom the public eye is fixed.

So I am very strongly for including employers with eight employees, and also opening the law to employees of State governments and educational institutions.

I have long urged the coverage of employees of State and lo ernments, of whom there are over 10 million in the United St employment discrimination problem is especially acute in are there is heavy minority population. This goes for law enforce education, and for the administration of justice.

lasses of employment which should be subject to Title VII ous, it seems to me, is employment in State and local gov-

n the committee report on the bill, the employment dis-problem is particularly acute in those governmental ac-

TRANSFER OF OFCC

The committee bill also transfers the functions of the Of eral Contract Compliance under Executive Order 11246. tive order deals with nondiscrimination and affirmative ac ments which must be complied with by Federal contracto Executive order program under which such controversial the Philadelphia plan and Order No. 4 have been promulg

I have had some serious questions concerning the desirab particular transfer, at least at this time, and I am reservin tion on any amendment which I or others may offer to stri it. Some of the reasons which have caused me to question bility of transferring OFCC at this time are as follows:

First, the Commission presently has a large backlog of almost 2 years behind in processing its caseload. Giving sion enforcement power under Title VII will further increas load greatly. Under these circumstances would it be app give the Commission the added responsibility for enfor Executive Order 11246 right now?

Second, the nature of the Executive order program, in it does the cooperation of every single Federal executive a quires that its implementation come from the highest level ment, that is, a Cabinet officer.

Third, concentration of all equal employment opportuni in one agency could make it easier for those who are oppo achievement of full equality of employment opportunity in A curtail the program through a limitation on appropriations.

Fourth, the problems of coordination which existed among ous Federal programs dealing with equal employment o have largely been solved through the steps which this adm has taken to insure much closer harmony among the Civil R sion of the Justice Department, the OFCC, and the EEO ticular, the EEOC and the OFCC have entered into a memor understanding designed to avoid overlap, conflict, and dup the kind which regrettably did exist in prior years.

Fifth, proper implementation of the Executive order pr quires a close working relationship between the Manpower tration—which is in the Labor Department also—the contract cies, and the Federal contractors, for special manpower tra education programs are frequently an integral part of co programs.

Last, and by no means least, during the past few years present administration, OFCC has gone to great lengths to the concept of affirmative action as required under the Execu program as something much more than just the duty not to active discrimination in hiring. Under this concept of a action OFCC has been able to promulgate plans, such as the phia plan, and numerous similar plans in other cities throu country, under which contractors agree to undertake good fa to increase the utilization of minority group employees and without reference to whether they are actually guilty of di crimination. Many Senators will recall that in 1969 I vigoro ultimately successfully defended the Philadelphia plan on happy to say that the legality of the plan was completely by the Third Circuit Court of Appeals in its decision— Association of Eastern Pennsylvania v. Secretary of F. 2d 1959 (3d Cir. 1971).

I of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, on the other hand, is ondiscrimination law. Affirmative action may be ordered, a remedy in a case of proven discrimination.

erstand it, the committee report so states on pages 29–30, tee does not intend, by approving the transfer of the func- CC to EEOC, to alter in any way the scope or meaning of ve order program. Thus, if this transfer were to be made, ency—EEOC—would be administering different standards VII and the Executive Order. The result might be confu- gency and confusion in the minds of Federal contractors in h the agency, or a watering down of the Executive order that it and the Title VII program become indistingishable.

n I have hesitated thus far in offering an amendment to ike the transfer provision is that despite some of OFCC's ives during the past 3 years, I must confess that I am far ed with the manner in which OFCC has discharged its ad- and management functions under the Executive order so the affirmative action concept looks good, and plans like lphia plan also promise a great deal, OFCC was unable o the committee staff concrete information showing the ts of some of the programs they have initiated, or that it pplying the Executive order in a manner differently than ould be applied. Thus, when the committee staff sought to hether the allegations of "motorcycle compliance" which ade by some critics of the Philadelphia plan were valid, unable to supply any information to show that a substan- of the additional black employees working under Federal d not simply been pulled off other jobs to satisfy the re- of the Philadelphia plan. Also, OFCC was unable to pro- te information dealing with the number of employers sup- assed over" for failure to submit acceptable affirmative re serious than any of OFCC's management deficiencies in nt, is the fact that during the 7 years the program has been d by the OFCC, just one debarment order has been issued Federal contractor—with 10 employees. In the face of urt decisions in actions brought by the Justice Department parties in which employers have been found guilty of dis- , and the knowledge we all share that employment discrimi- ll a fact in this country, it is almost beyond understand- h that one exception, not a single debarment order has ever under the OFCC program.

of the matters I am exploring with the Labor Department is the possibility of obtaining appropriate assurances that y changes will be made in OFCC so that if, in fact, the transfer provision is stricken or delayed we can be sure that O

I know that organized labor is very desirous of having the made of these Federal contractor equal employment opportun ters to the Commission. I am very understanding of that, an like to respond to it if possible. But I have felt it my duty these doubts to the Senate, so that we may come to a collective upon it, and within the next few days I shall hope to propos Senate the way in which I think this ought to go, or to stat Senate that I have been persuaded and will stand by the co bill as submitted. As I say, I reserve that question.

To sum up, Mr. President, I feel that on the basic provision bill, to wit, added enforcement power in the Commission of tional character, which we have given to other commissions, tion of the size of the establishment to which the law shall be ble, and the bringing under the protection of the Commission and local employment, there is no question that I shall do my to persuade the Senate that this is absolutely essential to com historic promise of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Indeed, it too long deferred.

For the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, I shall pres own recommendations to the Senate, insofar as the Senate interested in receiving them, well before any action is necessary

Again, I express my appreciation to the Senator from Penns

This amendment would establish the Office of General C under the EEOC, who would be appointed by the President, w advice and consent of the Senate, for a 4-year term. Under law the EEOC has a General Counsel's Office but that office subordinate to the Chairman and other Commissioners. We fe ever, that since this bill, S. 2515, is going to turn the EEOC int very much like a court, this court should not either exercise con its prosecutors or provide its own prosecutors. Instead, the pro arm of the EEOC should be separate and distinct from the arm. Hence, the reason for our amendment.

Our amendment, by setting up an independent General C Office, would accomplish this. Thus, the Commission would not to sit as prosecutor, judge, and jury combined. The prosecuting ld not serve under an independent, presidentially appointed 'ounsel not tied to the rest of the agency. This would free the complaints before the Commission, and conduct litigation ngress decided, in the case of the NLRB, that that Board had power in its own right without also being in control of the g arm. This is the way I feel about the new EEOC that we ring in S. 2515. As we increase the powers of this agency, good reason for doing so, nevertheless we should clearly ob-

This is a fair amendment. It is in keeping with our Nation's clear the fact that we are tryng to achieve, by this bill, and this tices exist in our society and to provide a way whereby, once to exist, they can be decided expeditiously so that the people volved will know they can get a quick and fair hearing, for "

I urge, Mr. President, the adoption of this amendment giving Equal Employment Opportunity Commission under our bill independent General Counsel's Office.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Gambrell). The question is on to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I first want to state that, as of the bill, I am in agreement with the amendment which is offered by the Senator from Ohio and fully explained by the S from Pennsylvania. It will make a substantial contribution to stance of this legislation. It certainly meets many of the anxie about the bill as it now exists.

This amendment calls for the establishment of a General C Office in the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, though a part of the Commission and empowered to act in is to be independent of its control. The purpose of the amend to insure that the prosecutorial and decisional functions of th mission will be firmly separated and to eliminate any lingering that the Commission would be involved in a conflict of acting as cutor and judge.

Under the scheme of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Com was established as an investigative body to facilitate a statutory ng voluntary compliance through the processes of conference, n, and persuasion. To this end the Commission was empow-r investigation, to determine only whether reasonable cause believe that an employer, employment agency, or labor orga-ad violated the act. In essence, then, the Commission's prisent function—deciding whether to proceed on charges filed ved persons or individual Commissioners—has been wholly ial in nature. Likewise, the Commission's function in ad-g the day-to-day work of its component sections has involved issioners, particularly the Chairman, deeply in investigaliation, case handling, and even litigation in Title VI cases district courts.

l under consideration vests the Commission with extensive rial powers similar to those possessed by many other adve agencies, such as the Occupational Safety and Health n and the National Labor Relations Board. This amend-

SUMMARY OF AMENDMENT

The amendment provides for the appointment by the Presi the Commission's General Counsel for a 4-year term. It gives th eral Counsel responsibility over the Commission's main prosec functions: Issuance of complaints, their prosecution before the mission, and conduct of all litigation in the Federal courts as other duties the Commission prescribes or the law provides. I not give the General Counsel authority over the investigat charges, the efforts of the Commission to achieve voluntary a tion with respondents, except after a complaint has been issu supervision over Commission personnel except for the appo of Regional Attorneys and concurrence in the Chairman's a ment of Regional Directors.

Furthermore, it contains the key language of section 5(c) Administrative Procedure Act which prohibits the same agen sonnel engaged in the prosecution of a case or any similar cas having anything to do with the decision in such case or case amendment also provides for the continuation of the General C or Acting General Counsel in that position after enactment o bill until a new appointee can take over. This will maintain se tinuity in this important position.

RATIONALE OF THE AMENDMENT

The purpose of this amendment is to ensure fundamental f for respondents, integrity of the Commission's decisions, and dence in the eyes of the public regarding such decisions. Th complished by the separation of functions that I have here de

It must be remembered, however, that the evil to be g against is the contamination of the judicial function by the p torial one. This would occur only when the same persons are engaged in both functions.

It is also necessary to avoid the creation of a two headed a with dual authority to make policy. Therefore, supervision a duties of agency personnel remains under the Chairman, w exception of the appointment of Regional Attorneys, so that C sion policy will be effectively carried out. LEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

LLIAMS. I yield.

LEN. Mr. President, do I understand the distinguished manabill to state that he is going to recommend the acceptance of dment to set up a General Counsel for the EEOC?

LLIAMS. The Senator is correct.

LEN. In the absence of the amendment, who would do the k for the Commission?

LLIAMS. The General Counsel. It is not set up in a procedural r the bill with what we call an independent General Counsel.
General Counsel, and under the Administrative Procedure nctions must be separated. The pending amendment, I think, accurately described as formalizing the separation of func-erwise required under the law.

LEN. In other words, without the pending amendment, the Counsel for the Commission would do the legal work for the on? And, with the pending amendment, the General Counsel mmission would do the legal work for the Commission.

LLIAMS. Without, again, the precision of stating the separanctions that this amendment does achieve.

LEN. How does it separate the functions? Just how does the nt separate the functions?

LLIAMS. Under its provisions, the President appoints an int General Counsel.

LEN. Yes, but who makes the policy? Will not the Commisnue to make the policy?

LLIAMS. It depends on what policy the Senator is inquiring

LEN. The General Counsel is not to be a policymaking official, LLIAMS. Could I in part reply with a question? Would the from Alabama believe it to be a policy decision when the Counsel makes a decision to prosecute a complaint?

Mr. ALLEN. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that is a policy decision, that is what the G Counsel does. He makes the decision to prosecute the complain

Mr. ALLEN. Then he becomes, in effect, the Commission; a correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. It is just the opposite. He becom prosecutor.

Mr. ALLEN. I am trying to find out in whom the policymaking reposes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The policy decision to bring the charges, to cute, is made by the General Counsel. The General Counsel that policy decision.

Mr. ALLEN. The General Counsel would file any such pro in the name of the Commission; would he not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that is correct. Insofar as the nomen is concerned, the answer would be "yes."

Mr. ALLEN. It is difficult for me to see just what change is wrought here except that the administration would appoint a G Counsel under the terms of the pending amendment. Who wo point the General Counsel without the pending amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The General Counsel, without the pending a ment, would be appointed by the Commission.

Mr. ALLEN. So, the only change then is as to who appoints t eral Counsel.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the answer to that question is "no." T provides on page 38:

> The commission shall issue and cause to be served upon any respondent complaint . . .

The pending amendment provides a change in the bill to re General Counsel may issue and cause to be served."

This is a clear distinction.

Mr. ALLEN. He would issue it in the name of the Commission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is his decision. He can make it or not, b the General Counsel's decision.

Mr. ALLEN. Are not the complaints filed with the Commis are they filed with the General Counsel?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The original charges go to the Commission responsibility is to investigate and, again, try to conciliate.

Mr. ALLEN. After that investigation, would they then mak investigation available to the General Counsel so that he co mine whether a complaint should be filed, or would the Co tell the General Counsel to file it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Commission submits to the General C the work, whereupon the General Counsel would decide w will prosecute the charges.

Mr. ALLEN. Then, the initiation of the prosecution would to be in the hands of the Commission, would it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. ALLEN. I understood the Senator to say the complaint with the Commission which then makes the investigation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The prosecution would be in the hands of th eral Counsel.

Mr. ALLEN. But who makes the investigation to turn it over t

LLIAMS. The Commission.
RD of West Virginia. Mr. President, may we have order?
ESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.
LEN. Who, then, directs the work of the General Counsel?
e Commission have any control over the General Counsel?
LLIAMS. That is the whole point. I am glad the Senator asked that way. That is why the amendment is being offered, to "prosecutorial" function an independence within the law.
er words, the question and this response clearly establishes pendent General Counsel, so that the judge and the prosecuearly separate and distinct. I think that would happen at any matter of legal guidance under the Administrative Pro-
t. But I am happy this is being offered to make it crystal

t my amendment. The amendment is offered by the Senator o and has been debated very effectively and completely by or from Ohio.
e that this colloquy with the Senator from Alabama has he support for this independent General Counsel to handle ution of these charges.
LEN. That is what I am trying to ascertain. Is he, in fact, nt?
LLIAMS. That is exactly what I think has been established.
LEN. Would he have the right to refuse to prosecute on a rned over to him by the Commission?
LLIAMS. Yes. Exactly.
LEN. The Commission makes the investigation.
LLIAMS. Yes.
LEN. Complaints are filed with it.
LLIAMS. Yes.
EN. And the General Counsel, if he saw fit—in other words, ct, would be a grand jury. Is that correct? He would deter-her to go on with the proceedings.
LLIAMS. It has been so long since I practiced law, but I there is an analogy here—something in the nature of the ounsel and the U.S. attorney.
LEN. So the Senator would take it that he would serve in ty of a grand jury?
LLIAMS. Well, would it not be more in the nature of a U.S. aking a matter to the grand jury? Then, of course, the U.S. oes take it before the district court.
EN. Would it be the duty of the Commission to turn every nplaint and investigation over to the General Counsel for tion as to whether discrimination existed, or would the on have the authority at some stage of the proceeding to say had been no discrimination and, therefore, that there is o lay before the General Counsel?
LLIAMS. The Commission does not have to take every charge igate it and refer it to the General Counsel. The answer to on is no. It has its discretion.
EN. The Commission, then, would still continue to have dis-ter having made its investigation, to determine whether there had been discrimination; they would then have dis whether to turn it over to the General Counsel.

Mr. Williams. The answer is crystal clear, yes.

Mr. Allen. Who is the General Counsel for the Commissio

Mr. Williams. The General Counsel now is a Commissio pointed counsel to the Commission. As I understand it, at this pa lar point in time he is an acting General Counsel. If my memory me correctly, it is Mr. Pemberton. I believe that is his name.

Mr. Allen. If the purpose of the bill is to see that there is fai fair play, and due process, I wonder why the sponsors of the bill not satisfied to leave jurisdiction over pattern and practice suits Department of Justice and why the sponsors saw fit to try to tra

Mr. Williams. Let me try to state it fairly and simply.

Mr. Allen. Would not the Justice Department be indepen the EEOC, and would not that independence have the same des ity as the creation of the Office of General Counsel would have?

Mr. Williams. There are other reasons. The situation with re to pattern and practice suits is similar to other changes made by bill, and that is the thought that in this area of discrimination in ployment, as complex as the whole systemic national discriminat shown to be, it requires an expertness, and it should be centered in place. There should be one agency of Government which has the responsibility to deal with discrimination in employment. Then they become experts in all the complex questions. That is one of reasons why this fragmentation is sought to be eliminated.

The pattern and practice suits have been effectively handled by Department of Justice, by the Attorney General.

Mr. Allen. In effect, is there not an independent counsel there?

Mr. Williams. Yes. But here is another problem that is develo I refer to the heavy burden that creates a degree of inequity and fairness where people across the country can be subject to investig and lawsuit from many quarters. We are trying to make a pote respondent—in this area respondent is like a defendant—know one place in Government to respond to and not to many. That is o the basic reasons for bringing pattern and practice suits under Equal Employment Opportunity Commission where the expert edge there resides and to relieve the Nation of the duplication of in three courts at one time.

Mr. Allen. Could not that duplication be avoided by, in effect, ing the Justice Department General Counsel for the Commissio leaving the pattern and practice jurisdiction over in the Justice partment and putting the duties of the General Counsel over Would it not be the feeling of the employers who have as few a people under the bill that there would be more impartiality Justice Department than a General Counsel who would be not more, in my judgment, than an in-house lawyer?

Mr. Williams. I think it would be the view of many people th all the prosecution and judicial decisions went over there it w bring greater deliberateness to the job, and the job might be put off put off, and it might not get done.

Yes, many employers would like to have it that way, but those want to see an acceleration of the elimination of discrimination w prefer it this way.

and that we have had this colloquy.
N. The General Counsel would be a part of the same Com-the same Department and the same building, with the

the junior Senator from Alabama wishes to make is that

N. I would like to make one further inquiry. Would the be filed by a Commissioner, or would it be filed, if at all, by Counsel? What effect would it have on the Commissioner's LAMS. The Commissioner's complaint is not included.

N. That brings on a little more talk, then, the Commis-plaint. The officer or employee of the Commission obviously possessing knowledge of the facts of possible discri could make a complaint. Then it would go to the General Cou would make the decision for prosecution.

Mr. ALLEN. Where is that provision? Is that provision amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us review this together?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator said it would be referred to the Counsel. The Office of General Counsel is just now being set up amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us read together page 55 of the report read section 706(a) together?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I read:

SEC. 706(a). The Commission is empowered, as hereinafter provid vent any person from engaging in any unlawful employment practice in sections 703 or 704 of this title.

There appears (a) in heavy brackets: (a) comes out and (b):

Whenever it is charged in writing under oath by a . . .

Is stricken out to read:

Whenever a charge is filed by or on behalf of a person claiming to be or by an officer or employee of the Commission . . .

If the Senator is following it closely he can see that the heavy eted parts take out "a member" so the charge is filed by a or employee of the Commission. That does not include a the Commission.

It is that charge that goes forward, under this amendment General Counsel, and there, as the amendment changes the on page 38 of the bill, "the Commission shall so notify the Counsel who may issue, and cause to be served on any respondent so forth. That brings it together. It is an awkward way to ex but it is an accurate way.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator would not feel that an officer of the mission, then, could be construed to be a Commissioner himself

Mr. WILLIAMS. He is not a commissioner himself.

Mr. ALLEN. A Commissioner is not an officer of the Com then, in the judgment of the distinguished Senator?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. I think our committee records and the will make that very clear.

Mr. ALLEN. After the complaint is filed with the Commission see fit they turn it over to the General Counsel to determine discrimination from the evidence that they present to him. He no investigation on his own. Is that right?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe here we will draw on some exp other agencies. This is not a situation that is sui generis. other agencies that do this. He should have, and I am saying it this become the method of prosecution, I would think, a intelligent decision whether to prosecute the charge, have to himself beyond or in addition to the material constituting it.

Mr. ALLEN. I understood the Senator to state earlier that eral Counsel would not investigate, but that the investigation be by the Commission.

LIAMS. The basic investigation is by the Commission.
EN. And they could turn over to him such evidence as they urn over?
LIAMS. And then he makes the decision whether to proceed rosecution.
EN. Based on the evidence that they saw fit to lay before him. rect?
LIAMS. That is basically it, but I do not believe there is any- I would think that he would have to do or might have to quiry beyond that.
EN. Yes, but I understood that that was not planned by the , but that he would just pass on what was handed to him.
LIAMS. Well, I would think a reasonable General Counsel pendent situation, if he had any questions would go out and nquiry himself. That is the way I look at it.
EN. But the Commission receives these complaints, they vestigation, they turn the information over to the General may or may not—is seems uncertain—make an independ- ation, and then a complaint is filed by the General Counsel mission with the Commission itself. It comes back to them; ? It goes the full circle back to them.
LIAMS. It is brought and filed, and is prosecuted before the .
N. Yes. That is what makes it so difficult.
LIAMS. Again, of course, as we have in so many areas of es and departments, it is prosecuted before another inde- e, that of the hearing examiner.
N. Yes.
LIAMS. And this is time-honored. As long as I have been n administrative law, I have had respect for the trial ex- hearing examiner. In the Federal Trade Commission, the the agencies have this position, within our system in this a unique, quasi-judicial, independent hearing officer.
EN. Yes. I was interested in hearing the Senator, though. he Commission was not required to turn over to the Gen- l all of the complaints that it receives.
LIAMS. Yes.
EN. In other words, it sifts the complaints that have been nly where the Commission, one feels, felt that there has mination would they turn it over to the General Counsel gh the routine of filing a complaint back with the very ch received the complaint originally, and then the Com- ving received the complaint, having weighed it and de- t should be turned over to the General Counsel, then puts hat and sits, then, as judge of the complaint originally it, and then merely turned over to the General Counsel fting of a complaint. That is what makes it so difficult or Senator from Alabama to see where there is any inde- nd where the Commission will be other than prosecutor. jury.
VEIKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey for the purpose of answering the Senator's question?
LIAMS. I shall certainly yield. I have tried and I have not succeeded in clarification. I am happy to yield to the Sena

Mr. SCHWEIKER. I thank the Senator from New Jersey for

I should like to point out two things to the distinguished from Alabama. First of all, the independent General Counsel own investigative resources.

Mr. ALLEN. That was not made clear in the colloquy.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. May I finish my point? He has his own gative resources, so that if at any point they want to run a investigation, or check the investigators, they have that opti gives the defendants more right of protection for due proc under the arrangement the Senator is talking about.

We have three steps that have to be gone through here. Eac the way, someone may decide the defendant is not guilty. From office personnel who look into the case, and to the indepen eral Counsel's Office that decides whether to issue a complai Commission itself, you have three steps where the defendan chance to have the charges "thrown out of court" because the not there. Far from restricting the rights of the defendant giving the defendant more rights, because there are three points where information has to go: First to the field office, t independent General Counsel, and then, of course, to EEOC and in the middle step of those three is a totally indepen vidual who reports to the President. This insures more prote if you had a straight line authority. It is just like the three br our Government, with its checks and balances. I do not see tor's point at all. I think the defendant, or respondent as he in these proceeding, has three cracks to show he is not gui really not guilty. I do not think the Senator understands the

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Alabama is not making that the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator fro sylvania does not make the bill more palatable, but it does it palatable enough. That is the point I am making. It does the problem of making the Commission other than a prosecu and jury.

The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania points out General Counsel is going to have a bunch of investigators. S a bunch of investigators over under the Commission, and the gate the complaint, and then they turn it over to the Gener who is working hand in glove with the Commission, and h investigators investigates it still further, further harassing players and the employees, and then, if he agrees with the sion that there is a valid complaint of discrimination, he complaint, which is to be heard by the very same Comm received the complaint originally and felt there was enough tion to turn it over to the counsel for prosecution.

The junior Senator from Alabama suggests that the Co has already prejudged the matter when they turned it ov General Counsel for the filing of a complaint to be heard by mission itself.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. I would like to ask the distinguished Sena Alabama a question. In the normal course of proceeding, if defendant three times to have an opportunity to be proven a fairer system, is it not better for the defendant's right e him the opportunity only once or twice? I do not see r's argument. We are giving him three opportunities to not guilty before he is finally judged, and the Senator is g about that.

EN. I will answer the distinguished Senator from Pennsylsking him the same question that I asked the distinguished m New Jersey: Why not leave this authority in the Justice t, if you want a really independent counsel? Why take the l pattern procedure away from the Justice Department and is in-house General Counsel? If you really want independ-not leave it in the Justice Department, where part of it

WEIKER. Well, then, of course, we would spread this work r, larger agency, one more step away from the President. I that very specifically: We would be putting in one more reaucracy to make a decision when, under our proposal, the t General Counsel is directly responsible to the President fore the EEOC, and therefore, has more authority and in-than if he were even an Assistant Attorney General, going ps to the President. By giving him a direct presidential t for this work, he is insulated from other problems. He ve to worry about crime prosecutions coming up, about utions, or about anything. These are specialized cases and ing him more power by giving him the President's ear.

EN. Do we not already have the Justice Department set up?
have to set up another layer of bureaucracy, as proposed in 's amendment?

WEIKER. The reason we are changing the whole picture is do not think the present pattern is working. The Subcom-Employment, Manpower, and Poverty of our full commit-ch I serve with our chairman, the distinguished Senator Jersey, recently studied a very important report by the 20th nd, pointing out not only that in many of our central city lack youth unemployment rate is 17 or 20 times the white ent rate, but also that in many areas when blacks do gradu-gh school, when they do have skilled job training, they can-jobs. That is exactly what the 20th Century Fund Task ed.

g is wrong with the system, and we are trying to change why we are restructuring this procedure, and giving the nger enforcement tools.

EN. Are they going to be aided by putting it in the Office ral Counsel, rather than in the Justice Department? It is re now, is it? They do not have cease-and-desist authority, t have until this bill is passed, if it ever is passed.

WEIKER. That is right; it is not anywhere now, and that is

EN. It is not because it is in the Justice Department; it is not anywhere, is that not right?

WEIKER. The Government's legal work for equal employtunity is in several places now.

Mr. ALLEN. Not on cease and desist. Where is cease-and-desist authority of the EEOC now?

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Let me answer the Senator's first question first, the third question.

The problem I defined is trying to be attacked in three different departments now. We have the EEOC, the Justice Department, the Office of Federal Contract Compliance in the Labor Department, three separate entities. One objective of this bill is to bring some order out of chaos and to have one responsibility. That is the reason.

That is the first question. What is the next question?

Mr. ALLEN. Is the Senator not, then, splitting it up? The Senator says he wants to put it all in one department. Now he says there is need for a special, separate, independent legal counsel. Is that not in effect splitting up the authority and the power?

Mr. SCHWEIKER. No. The Senator from Alabama again is misconstruing and misinterpreting what we are saying.

Mr. ALLEN. I would be interested in the Senator's answer, then.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. I should like to answer that.

The first thing we are doing, as I pointed out earlier, is to take the fragmented approach we have and put it primarily in one agency, the EEOC.

Mr. ALLEN. And then the Senator fragments it again.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. May I answer the question?

Mr. ALLEN. I wish the Senator would.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. If the Senator will let me answer one question at a time, we will get a little further ahead.

I am saying that we are taking the fragmented power from three agencies, putting it in one agency for the sake of efficiency, for the sake of handling, to improve the operation of the system. We are also saying that because we are putting new cease-and-desist power in the EEOC, we ought to be sure we protect the rights of the defendants and to protect the rights of the defendants, we are saying that there are three steps under the cease and-desist process that someone has to go through before he is proved guilty.

I see nothing inconsistent, nothing contradictory, nothing in any way opposed to that objective. The distinguished Senator from Alabama is trying to confuse the issue by saying there is, when in fact there is not.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the Commission eventually serve as the jury on the validity of the complaint of discrimination?

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Under the new proposal?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. The EEOC will serve in that way, yes.

Mr. ALLEN. Has it not initiated the complaint, however, by bringing the complaint and then sitting in judgment of the complaint in its investigation, sifting it, and then turning it over to the General Counsel? Has it not already prejudged the issue of discrimination or nondiscrimination?

Mr. SCHWEIKER. No. The Senator is using semantics.

We are separating two different levels of government. There is regional EEOC office. That office will do the field work and will decide whether to go on from that level. They will make that judgment, separate and distinct from the top people who make the judgment at the other end of the spectrum, the Commissioners in Washington.

are two levels of operations, one making local decisions, information and investigating, and the other doing the ecision, here in Washington. They are doing two separate say they are all doing the same thing is not an accurate tion of what we are proposing.

LEN. In other words, in the Senator's home State there is a ball team, Pennsylvania State——

WEIKER. The Senator knows my weak point.

LEN. This procedure reminds the junior Senator from Ala- he procedure in a football game. The Commission receives laint originally, it sifts it, it weighs it, it investigates it, it s there has been discrimination, and it tosses the complaint l over to the General Counsel. The General Counsel files a with the Commission itself and then tosses the football back mmission, which then has the power to judge whether or not tion exists.

ot a fair analogy?

WEIKER. Let me begin by saying that the reasoning and logic the distinguished Senator from Alabama improved immeas- en he talked about the great football team from Penn State. re are on the same wavelength and are thinking the same concur with that presumption.

LEN. I am talking about the postseason game, not the game essee.

WEIKER. We were pretty pleased with the ball game, our-

with the Senator on this point, butI fail to see how that re- he argument at hand, although I thank him for his nt.

LEN. The complaint is the football. It is tossed by the Com- er to the General Counsel, and it is tossed, in turn, by the ounsel back to the Commission, which has already prejudged and which certainly is going to hold that discrimination ed on the complaint it had decided initially.

WEIKER. It is the same football that our Constitution throws judicial branch to the legislative branch to the executive hat is the fundamental premise on which this country was tossing that football around among the three branches of nt.

LEN. It is all over in one branch. It is in the executive branch, er specifically, the point that the Senator is confusing is that ep is an investigation. The local level operation at the field investigation; nothing more than that. It is an investiga- alogy, it is like what a grand jury might decide, and then it the grand jury to the regular jury. This goes from the field he General Counsel. There's nothing inconsistent at all.

EN. And back to the Commission.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Then it goes upstairs, to the board of di

It struck me that the Senator from Alabama struck the key p

INICK. Well, if yours and mine are combined——

VEIKER. I must say that I pretend to be knowledgeable on INICK. My amendment is simple. The Senator is familiar use I offered it in committee. What it would do would be to EOC power to proceed to Federal district court on legiti-meilable disputes for resolution rather than through cease-orders issued by the Commission. Under such cases, the unsel would then be the one to prosecute that case before district court.

VEIKER. As I understand the Senator's amendment, from s just said, if the amendment is adopted, there would seem ss need to have an independent General Counsel. The Senlment would substitute for our EEOC hearing procedures, istrict court. This, by nature of the judicial system, would ractically all need for an independent legal counsel within since the court system would take over that level.

INICK. My amendment would take over at the level where

So Mr. Schweiker's amendment (No. 797) was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I support the Equal Em[ployment] Opportunity Act, S. 2515, as reported by the Committee o[n Labor] and Public Welfare.

The time has now come when we must firmly establish a[nd guar]antee the protections provided for under Title VII of the Civ[il Rights] Act of 1964. No longer can we permit millions of American[s—] women, blacks, Indian Americans, the Spanish speaking, a[nd other] minority groups—to continue suffering the indignities and i[nequities] of discrimination in employment. No longer can we be conte[nt with] a conciliatory approach to the resolution of complaints of civ[il rights] violations committed against any American who wants a job [or] seeks advancement to a position for which he or she is fully q[ualified]. Nor, in the protection of these civil rights, can we now be s[atisfied] with any enforcement procedure wherein the delay of justice [is] the denial of justice.

The experience of the past 7 years has shown us that by [failing to] provide the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [with] reement powers, we established an agency under the 1964 s Act which has been very successful in ferreting out the discrimination, and pointing out to us how widespread hed this discrimination is, but which has not been able effective relief to eliminate this discrimination.

inal view that employment discrimination consists of a lated incidents has been shattered by evidence which shows rment discrimination is, in most instances, the result of ained practices and policies which frequently do not even discriminatory effects on the surface. The EEOC has ny times that much of what we previously accepted as yment policy does, in effect, promote and perpetuate dis patterns which can be traced back to the Civil War and speak for themselves. This Nation's minorities and women e treated like second-class citizens. Their ability to obtain ility to advance in these jobs, to receive the same wages as by the dominant segment of society, and their higher nployment continues to indicate the disparate treatment cord this segment of our society. rogress over the past decade in America in overcoming economic position resulting from discrimination, we are ay with a median-income gap between Negro and white $3,957. And the gap is even wider for Spanish-speaking ose median income in 1969 was $5,641. The unconscionable on in salary levels for women for the same jobs as are — women scientists who must accept a median salary that than for their male counterparts, or women factory workedian earnings are $2,747 below those of male workers— is by the all-too-frequent denial of opportunity for women higher paying positions.

result of this has been that while we have provided the
for the elimination of employment discrimination in en-VII of the Civil Rights Act, we have not provided the ich this aim is to be achieved.
e last Congress, the Senate adopted S. 2453, a bill very e present Committee bill, S. 2515, and which would have e present defects in Title VII. However, the House failed to act on that measure before the end of its term. This year, the House has already acted in this area, and the responsibility rests with the Senate to insure the civil rights guarantees of Title VII.

I would like to note briefly some of the major provisions of S. 2515 and explain why this bill would provide the most effective enforcement procedure for the implementation of Title VII.

S. 2515 provides that the EEOC shall be granted administrative powers by which it will be able to issue enforceable orders in cases where violations of the law are established. By this grant, the bill would establish the EEOC with the same kind of enforcement provisions currently granted to most Government agencies and generally recognized as the basic administrative enforcement mechanism.

It is now an admitted fact that Title VII litigation is as complex and as subtle as any of the other specialized areas of law presently administered by other Federal agencies. Judicial awareness of this complexity is evident in statements by the courts both in the awarding of liberal attorney's fees for Title VII lawyers and in extending the amount of time required to resolve Title VII claims. It has become obvious that Title VII litigation requires specialized knowledge and expertise. The one agency which has the necessary experience and expertise to deal with the multitude of issues and variations of employment discrimination is the EEOC. Through its experience of the past 6 years, it has developed an experienced staff and a wealth of information which provides the expertise needed to deal with the various aspects of employment discrimination. The courts, while recognizing that the EEOC has no enforcement powers, have nonetheless acknowledged the agency's qualifications and have frequently stated that EEOC opinions are entitled to great weight in subsequent court interpretations, and many a case has been decided on the basis of arguments presented by EEOC attorneys in amicus briefs filed with the courts.

Moreover, the administrative process foreseen by S. 2515 would provide for an inexpensive, efficient, and expeditious means for adjudication for both complainants and respondents. When a charge is filed by the Commission, it will retain its present procedures of attempting to secure voluntary compliance. If this should fail, however, and it is the opinion of the Commission that a violation may have occurred which should be resolved, it will then submit the case to a hearing examiner. He will then conduct, under the provisions of the Administrative Procedures Act, an administrative hearing on the charge, receive evidence, will allow for the examination of witnesses, and will, after the entire case has been presented, make a determination of the facts.

In addition, if either party feels that the hearing has not adjudged the facts, then an appeal may be had to the appropriate U.S. Court of Appeals. I believe the due process provisions of the bill, and an appropriate separation of functions in the administrative process, can effectively assure that the rights of the respondent are fully protected.

This use of the administrative process will expedite the resolution of Title VII claims, will guarantee to all parties fair and impartial adjudication of their claims, and will at the same time relieve the courts of the necessity to entertain the ever increasing number of Title VII suits. At the same time, the voluntary settlement of so provides for an expansion of Title VII jurisdiction to employers, employment agencies and labor organizations or more employees or members, as well as employees of y, and local governments, and all employees of educautions. The need to expand Title VII in these areas is olished. As stated by the Chairman of the EEOC in testithe committee this year, discrimination should be attacked is the elimination of all vestiges of employment discrimof State and local employees is another area where the employment discrimination has been noted but no ade-y has been available. The presence of discrimination in ocal governments has been well documented by the U.S.

In removing the existing exemption of employees of educatio

Federal remedy to overcome employment discrimination.

Discrimination in America's educational institutions has publicized in some of the most famous civil rights cases decide courts and in daily articles in the Nation's newspapers. I can reason why these institutions should enjoy a special immu their employment practices. There is nothing in Title VII to that employment in educational institutions is any different f

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wanted early clarification of that.

Mr. DOMINICK. During the process of our committee h s to me that if we look at this in any kind of logic, and we can see immediately that the added load will require at increase in administrative staff in the EEOC but is mean a much longer backlog before any case can be

SMALL BUSINESS RELIEF AMENDMENT

BRELL. Mr. President, I am offering today an amendment ng bill, which amends the Equal Employment Opportunity

y in offering this amendment, that I share a strong com-the principle of equal employment opportunities, regard-sex, or national origin. Fundamental to the goals of "life, the pursuit of happiness" are the right to vote and the for gainful employment. Neither of these should be re-itrarily, or for fanciful reasons, or by outmoded customs. expressed goal, shared by the President and both major hat of welfare reform. I consider this Nation's commit-ial employment opportunities to be plank in the welfare form. If we are truly committed to the reform of our em, we can hardly tolerate the denial of access to economic grounds of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

lege which we enjoy to make distinctions and selections us reasons, does not extend to distinctions and selections e reasons cited. If the luxury of discrimination for these o be tolerated, then our welfare system must necessarily l allowances for the harvest of unemployment, under-, irresponsible behavior, and poverty which naturally will annot permit the relegation of many of our citizens to economic opportunities and at the same time deplore f initiative and productive work habits.

. President, I am prepared to support adequate enforce-ions for the implementation of equal employment opportu-e truly believe in equal employment opportunities, and ional Government should accord these opportunities to all re can be no hesitation from assuring that these rights gful enforcement.

The House of Representatives has adopted a measure whi support. An amendment to the pending bill has been offere Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) substituting the Hous enforcement procedures for those recommended by the Senat and Public Welfare Committee. I expect to support the ado the Dominick amendment, and to vote for the Senate bi amended.

At the same time, I do not feel that I can at this time, conscience, support the method of enforcement contained in the committee version of this legislation. My reasons for making portant distinction between the House enforcement version a Senate enforcement version are twofold.

First, I have confidence in the Federal judicial system to ment a consistent and manageable job discrimination act. There areas of public administration in which some peculiar experti quired in the enforcement area, justifying the formation of a Federal agency with cease-and-desist powers. I do not belie this has been proven to be so in the case of equal employm portunities. Such expertise as may be necessary, can be develop fully exposed in Commission activity under the House bill.

However, if employers, for reasons sufficient to themselves have court determinations of the issue of discrimination in case, or legal questions arising in a given case. I believe the court system to be completely adequate for this purpose.

The surge toward cease and desist powers smacks of an play politics with job discrimination, and to leave the entire a constant uproar, resulting in continued racial tension and cons disruption of trade and commerce.

In my judgment, an advisable course would be to adopt th enforcement provisions at the present time, and to evaluate pro the elimination of job discrimination through experience und form of enforcement. Should that experience disclose a need for and-desist authority, then let it come at the proper time.

In addition, I have reservations about the cease-and-desist a because of the experience which we have had in my section country, the South, with administrative manipulations of civi enforcement. The South has become a laboratory for social e ment, where laws are enacted, and enforcement practices a which are not and would not be enacted and applied for other s of the country. In short, there is widespread evidence of disc tory civil rights enforcement by Federal agencies against the and I would be more hopeful of evenhanded treatment from t eral judiciary than to an unbridled Federal agency.

My specific purpose today is to propose an amendment which appropriate, regardless of the enforcement procedures adopted legislation. Its purpose is to assure that enforcement of this leg which must necessarily be selective and exploratory, does no the effect of destroying small businesses which have been wro of the sweat, blood, and tears of individual American citizens only purpose in conducting business is to secure a decent liv

Senator, I am constantly confronted with the devastating effe ng Government regulations have on small business. Al-Government has a legislative commitment to free enterncouragement of individual opportunities, and categorically isinesses of all kinds, we condone on every side regulatory nd procedures which pit the overwhelming financial d manpower of the Federal Government against the indi-nessman. There is no question but what this imbalance of engtli denies small businessmen a fair opportunity for selfainst Government regulation. Big and rich business enter-afford to battle Government equally, and in some cases at ge, securing for themselves much more favorable treatment air trials" and "consent judgments." ndment which I have offered, in a very small way, assures of small businesses who may be selected for investigation, , and enforcement under this act, that they will not have full economic brunt of defending themselves. We owe this l business community in simple justice, not only to balance of individual cases but because almost all of those moved he early stages will be "guinea pigs" for testing the laws

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, yesterday I gave a brief state my reasons for having introduced this amendment. Today, w manager of the bill present, I should like to go into the matter a more length. I do not intend to indulge in any terribly exten cussions, but we have also, in addition to myself, some other S this will take a large portion of the day. I am, however, willing point that a noncontroversial amendment or other amendm be ready for consideration, to let this amendment be set aside others may be taken up, and then we can go back to this one.

Since enactment as part of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Ti has stood as a national commitment to the elimination of a of employment discrimination. However, in many cases the ment has remained only a declaration which, because of the enforcement machinery, has not been translated into concrete for those in the Nation's work force who have been denied ment rights, because of their race, color, religion, sex or origin. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission is with enforcing the law against infringements upon such emp rights, but it is essentially limited in its enforcement powers to tion and voluntary compliance. We would all prefer to see thi divided in that way but the temper of the times militates ag

The issue, therefore, is no longer whether we need enforcem this end the Senate is given two types of enforcement mach

As most of you know, I am a confirmed proponent of Fed offensive than the absurdity of such an argument is its g implications that an aggrieved employee will not re- in U.S. district courts. By impugning the reputation of usted friend of minority rights, the civil libertarians are s proud. The old lament, "How soon they forget" was ppropriate.

l libertarians are to prevail with their argument, they at not only will the Dominick amendment not effectively mployment rights of minorities, but that cease-and-desist will. This, in and of itself, is a shaky premise. Essentially, the argument must be that by vesting an acknowledged ad employee's rights such as the EEOC with enforcement po thereby guarantee the best protection of such rights. This simplistic for several reasons.

Prof. Alfred Blumrosen, of Rutgers Law School, finds su ing faulty. Mr. Blumrosen, an authority on minority em wrote a book on the subject in 1971, "Black Employmen Law." As quoted in a September 15, 1971, Wall Street Jour by Elliot Carlson, Mr. Blumrosen, in referring to cease- proponents, states:

An awful lot of liberals haven't stopped to think that what they for isn't appropriate to the problem. "They're basing their views on experience, and think that because the board helped unions get esta EEOC can do the same for civil rights groups. That's not necessari

The article continues to say:

Mr. Blumrosen argues that minorities have been far more success ing their rights through courts than administrative procedures. He that States have invariably failed in their own efforts to eradica through administrative cease-and-desist powers. (Of 34 States wit ment practice commissions, 32 have such powers.) Others support his

"I doubt whether cease-and-desist orders could get at the vestig better than the courts," declare Bernard Anderson, assistant profess try at the University of Pennsylvania. "It would take years t guidelines on which to base such orders, but if you had a good case be in court next week."

The article further states:

Pennsylvania's Mr. Anderson contends that most discriminatory pr institutional: subtle practices that leave minorities at a disadvantage cultural and educational differences. He doubts whether such forms of be rooted out by cease-and-desist powers.

"At the labor board, individual cases are decided on individual observes. "Thus cease-and-desist orders fail to create broad legal prin 'that's not good enough for race questions.' Mr. Anderson questions, fo whether any such order could ever have had the impact of the Griggs Power Co. decision, in which the Supreme Court recently held that e tests, even if fairly applied, are invalid, if they have a discriminatory can't be justified on the basis of business necessity.'"

Additionally, this logic fails to consider the legendary vi of presidentially appointed boards. Such boards tend to react cal winds rather than stare decisis and, consequently, what employee board today could well be a proemployer board to Probably the best example of this is the National Labor R Board. The NLRB, which possesses cease and desist enf powers similar to S. 2515, has been criticized for lack of l consistency, fluctuating from promanagement decisions du Eisenhower administration to prolabor positions during the and Kennedy administration. Determination of employe rights deserves and requires nonpartisan judgment. This pro best afforded by Federal court judges who, shielded from influence by life tenure, are more likely to withstand politica and render their decision in a climate tempered by judicial and supported by historical judicial independence.

Allegations have been made that in placing enforcement of ment disputes in Federal courts, the amendment will clog court and greatly extend the settlement time of such disputes. Cons of this contention is most important as a speedy resolution of

I doubt that it represents an isolated occurrence, because I interpret EEOC vested cease-and-desist enforcement powers a contrary to the interests of the rank-and-file members of or labor unions. It is logical to assume that the present Commis continue to pursue its active employees' rights philosophy aft armed with cease-and-desist powers. The consequence will m ably be increased minority hiring requirements at the ex many instances, of union hiring and seniority rights. I am s confused as to why the leaders of organized labor have ch apparently jeopardize the very important hiring and seniorit of the members in at least one instance. Any explanation as apparent inconsistency would be most helpful for both my in

In my opinion we do not get adequate impartiality with cea

If we have an impartial court proceeding, we would have fairer action, much more impartiality, and some ability to

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished from Colorado and I express my support for amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick). I do belief that adoption of this amendment is urgently required the most effective realization of the objective of S. 2515 and of T of the Civil Rights Act of 1964—the elimination of discri practices in the employment of American workers.

S. 2515 would vest the adjudicatory power and authority cease-and-desist orders in the EEOC itself and the analysis of t posal has been very adequately pointed out by the distinguish Senator from Colorado. I express my support and concu analysis that what is involved is that this would enable the E sue in Federal court for redress of employees' grievances if th ment is adopted.

We should not be confused into accepting the knee-jerk reac because the cease-and-desist approach is the more extreme r therefore, a more effective, pro-civil-rights approach than t enforcement method.

Nothing could be further from the truth. An objective co of the two approaches reveals that the court enforcement would more effectively repair injuries caused by employment ination and protect the civil rights of all Americans.

First and foremost, it is inevitable that the rights and in aggrieved employees and of respondent employers will be re if the EEOC is granted the power not only to investigate cha issue complaints, but also to adjudicate those complaints a enforcement orders. If the Commission were to adopt the attitude proper for its role as judicial arbiter, the employees wo the benefits of the Commission's present function as advocate cause and as zealots in the effort to redress employee grievan the other hand, the Commission continued its attitude of p for the employee, the respondent employers would clearly be the due process to which they are entitled in the adjudicatory ing.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the amendment adopte day by the Senate solves this problem. I voted in favor of that ment and I think it is a step forward.

There is no excuse for us to sanction new injustices in our right existing injustices—certainly not when a reasonable a effective remedy is available to us.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission is a p appointed body, and if it were given the cease-and-desist p exercise of that power would inevitably fluctuate with the winds.

If, as we propose, the EEOC is authorized to prosecute co in Federal district courts, then the investigative and prosecu tion will be properly separated from the adjudicatory pow fully performing that function for which it is perfectly s EEOC can remain a zealous proponent of the employee and ju court judge can perform the service for which he has distin himself in every area. that putting such cases in the Federal courts would clog the EEOC does not resolve by conciliation. In fiscal year 32 of 20,122 charges received by the EEOC failed a solu-

Therefore, those cases which had to go to court would distributed among the district judges. Certainly then it woul so manageable if all had to be handled by the Commission itse the cease-and-desist procedure.

Without the Dominick amendment, S. 2515 opens the door to unnecessary expansion of an already cumbersome Federal bure This will add another unnecessary cost to our Government and our taxpayers with the bill.

Mr. FANNIN. I would say to the distinguished Senator fro Carolina that his analysis is certainly correct in my mind. It d a problem because after all, the stated intent of the amendm to accomplish just exactly what was stated as far as appoint counsel is concerned, but not the follow-through. I concur in th that if we are going to have equity involved, then we must

Mr. ERVIN. Does the Senator from Arizona agree with the S from North Carolina that that amendment leaves unmodified t and the power of the Communists to investigate charges a to go to the General Counsel and urge him to make charges?

Mr. FANNIN. The Senator always presents his case effectiv very righteously, and that is true. This is carrying a program t intended to try to settle differences into an area that creat ferences. I feel that is very unfair. I certainly do not think be judge and jury and decide the case and then decide the p and be fair and equitable as a commission. I think it is unfa Commission to impose these obligations on it.

Mr. ERVIN. Is not this fundamentally comparable to what have been the situation when the 18th amendment to the Co was adopted to outlaw liquor if the amendment had given th cuting attorneys the power to prosecute charges and then to de the charges that were valid?

Mr. FANNIN. I think, when one is making an analogy, he coul be sustained. I, of course, feel very keenly about this because do I feel the Commission is charged with a responsibility, bu

NIN. It is rather inconsistent with what is intended under that we rely upon so faithfully in this country of ours for r the law.

N. Does the Senator from Arizona agree with the Senator Carolina that under this bill, the Commission is charged sponsibility of enforcing a law which is designed to compel y to employ people from the minority rather than from y?

NIN. Yes; of course, the whole intent of the legislation was nd equitable with the minority; I do not think it was ever at it should be unfair to the majority. But in the very op-he Commission, where they have this dual or, one might responsibility, it is very difficult for them to carry through
I think was originally intended by Congress.

N. In other words, the duty is placed upon the Commission specific law, and then the Commission, in effect, are made ecide whether the law that they are charged with enforced; is that not true?

NIN. That is true, and I think it is very unfair to impose ion upon them.

N. Now, while this amendment designates the General the one who can make the charges before the Commission, s the Commission and its agents with the responsibility for g charges, and gives them the power to make charges subpproval of the General Counsel, and so they are charged, th either assembling or supervising the evidence to sustain that they called to the attention of the General Counsel.

NIN. That is true. It is regrettable that it is that way.

N. Then the members of the Commission, or those who are ally allied with them in the enforcement of this statute, s to pass on the validity of the charges which are based estigations made by the agency itself.

NIN. Well, the problem, as I see it, that is being created, is e a general counsel appointed by the President, but that Counsel is not in control of his responsibilities. His responould be carrying through as a general counsel, and the r him would be under his jurisdiction and not under the 's jurisdiction. This is what I think the distinguished Senaorth Carolina has brought out as a great inequity.

N. If we are going to have a system where justice is ad-we are going to have to have a complete divorce between re to exercise the judicial function and those who are going

NIN. Yes. I think that is the intent of our laws and the ur Constitution.

N. And does not the Senator from Arizona agree with from North Carolina that no matter how good the men are appointed to an agency to enforce a law of this kind,

Mr. FANNIN. I think because of that fear we do have the se

President Roosevelt's Committee on Administrative Management in those having to do with investigation or prosecution.

Now, the Senator will note that the decision in this case mended not only divorcing the functions of those who jud matter from those of the prosecuting attorney, but also from the investigator; and this amendment leaves the investigating and duties of the Commission untouched, does it not?

Mr. FANNIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. ERVIN. Is it conceivable to the Senator from Arizona can expect an unbiased judgment where the agency which as the testimony on which a prosecution is based is to judge the of the accusation based on its investigation?

Mr. FANNIN. I agree with the Senator. I think it is very unfor that we impose on this Commission these obligations, becaus would have, I think, an opportunity to render a greater service could carry through with what I think was intended by Congres inally, and that was not to adjudicate the cases.

Mr. ERVIN. Justice Jackson wrote an opinion in the case to
I have referred which I believe every person who advocates legis like this ought to memorize before attempting to persuade C to enact it.

He points out that it is not sufficient merely to say that a ma investigated or who prosecuted should not sit as a judge, but t diverse functions should be entirely separate and put in separate cies. He cites much learned discussion from reports of committee have investigated this subject—that where a man one day acts investigator or a prosecutor and the next day acts as a judge purpose of judging the validity of charges, he gets in a ps psychological situation in which he cannot discharge the judicial tion fairly.

ere, and what agency Justice Jackson was talking about.
N. Well, he was talking about the procedures of the immiofficials do. They conducted investigations, and then they charges based on their investigations. The Court struck as not in sufficient compliance with the Administrative Act.

Mr. Ervin. Yes; and they ought not be permitted, if just be done. No one should have the right to adjudicate the rights people finally except a court of law which is vested with the power of the United States. It is unfortunate that the Supreme does not hold that whenever Federal judicial power is exer for life. He is divorced from the enforcement of law. He is with the duty of considering the facts as they are assembled a

The distinguished Senator from Arizona has pointed out th appointees to this Commission are political appointees. They

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought, when the Senator from North voted "yea" on yesterday, that he made the wisest judgment in accepting the amendment and voting "yea" on it.

Mr. FANNIN. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator yields the floor, I wonder I could ask one or two questions. The Senator was concer the employer faced with uncertainty, and the economic bu entails.

Mr. FANNIN. I would say to the Senator from New Jersey cases, he knows about, where they have been in turmoil and been able to get the cases settled. There was one in Virgini long ago, a shipbuilding company which had problems so fa tracts were concerned. The Senator remembers that very well not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was that not the Bethlehem Steel case?

Mr. FANNIN. No. The Newport News case.

AMS. Yes, that was the problem where the company was ree agencies—the EEOC, the Department of Justice, and

AMS. All right. I appreciate that. That would give the uthority to go to court to have its findings prosecuted and ld the Senator agree, then, to make life more certain for that the functions of the Justice Department under practices, and the Department of Labor under the OFCC ould logically be brought to the EEOC so that companies n or Newport News, or whoever they may be——

N. It is a confusing situation today, I agree with the New Jersey; but I am not in a position to say whether in one place or in another at this time.

IS. Mr. President, I am very strongly opposed to the pro- 2515, the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement ssue to be dealt with in the bill is to decide what means nt machinery shall be established to carry out the find- Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. As now ill would vest the Commission with the power to issue ist orders. In my judgment this is unsound. It violates f separation of powers because the Commission, and the lone, would have the powers of investigation, of the of the action to be taken in a case, and the implementa- decision. The Commission would be the prosecutor and is is dangerously unsound. It infringes on the freedoms an people as individuals and as groups.

f cease-and-desist orders is unnecessary and illogical as gerous precedent. The Federal court system is available n of enforcement rulings which the Commission might seek. This is the constitutional solution to the problem, as w logical solution. The Equal Employment Opportunity Com not staffed or trained to carry out this additional mission an labors under a large backlog of cases, even under its pres limited authority. A large, additional administrative org would have to be recruited and trained to create this new and sary bureaucracy—an illogical action and a dangerous inno our governmental system of judicial review of disputes citizens.

There are other faults in this bill, as well. It would vest in a administrative agency—the Commission—jurisdiction ove aspects of State and local governments. The bill provides tha particular case, cease-and-desist orders would not be used and ment would be by Federal courts. Even so, the entrance o trated Federal power into the operations of local goverm wrong, and can have ultimate effects that are very distu contemplate.

Similarly, the removal of exemptions for educational ins has implications that are extremely undesirable.

The continual harassment of the people of our country by Federal controls is onerous to an extreme degree. Federal re of the daily activities of our peoples lives is growing each y it is rapidly becoming intolerable. At the best, the thousands of ments of all the Federal regulations are time consuming, become expensive to an employer or an individual citizen worst, they can leave the citizen lost in a bureaucratic maz flicting information, or even inflicted with an inequity for w regulations provide no recourse.

This bill establishes a regulatory morass which will be en founder an average citizen trying to make a living under enterprise system. For example, it applies to anyone who hi or more persons, and as I said, that includes a State or local ment, or a university. A charge of unlawful employment pra be lodged by anyone, including an employee of the EEOC. Th would no longer have to be under oath, as previously requi EEOC then must serve the employer with notice that a c been filed against him. The EEOC then proceeds to invest employer. They can keep him on the hook for 4 months bef tell him how he came out. If they do not like what he did, issue a cease-and-desist order and award back pay to an emp up to 2 years. If the employer does not like what the EEO him, it is too bad. All he can do is seek refuge in the U.S. appeals and try to obtain justice. I say again, if there is a d be made as to whether one citizen has damaged another, it the court in the first place, and not in the EEOC.

The recordkeeping that will be required by this bill stag imagination. The EEOC is authorized to impose recordkee reporting requirements on employers, employment agenc organizations, schools, State or local governments, and others provision in the bill is anything but sympathetic to the plight who must keep these records. It says that persons or orga

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, freedom from religious d tion has been considered by most Americans from the da Founding Fathers as one of the fundamental rights of the the United States. Yet our courts have on occasion determ this freedom is nebulous, at least in some way. So in presen proposal to S. 2515, it is my desire and I hope the desire o leagues, to assure that freedom from religious discriminati employment of workers is for all time guaranteed by law.

I am sure that my colleagues are well aware that there a religious bodies—we could call them religious sects; denom in nature—not large in membership, but with certain strong tions, that believe there should be a steadfast observance of bath and require that the observance of the day of worship, t the Sabbath, be other than on Sunday. On this day of wors is prohibited whether the day would fall on Friday, or Sat Sunday. There are approximately 750,000 men and women Orthodox Jews in the U.S. work force who fall in this cat persons I am discussing. There are an additional 425,00 men an in the work force who are Seventh-day Adventists.

Mr. President, I am a member of a denomination which i tively small one, the Seventh Day Baptists. Perhaps there 5,000 individuals within that denomination in the work fo think it is important for me to say that within the groups th mentioned, we think in terms of our observance of the Sabba ning at sundown Friday evening and ending at sundown S evening, following the Biblical words, "From eve unto eve s celebrate your Sabbath." I make this statement only by way nation of the groups I have just mentioned.

I think it is important for us to realize that the persons f I hope I speak—and I hope I speak for all persons in this are workers scattered throughout the United States of Ameri is no section of the country which would not be affected, we b structively, by the adoption of this amendment.

I say to the distinguished chairman of the Labor and Pub fare Committee, who manages this bill, that there has been refusal at times on the part of employers to hire or continue in ment employees whose religious practices rigidly require abstain from work in the nature of hire on particular days, has been, because of understandable pressures, such as commit a family nature and otherwise, a dwindling of the membe some of the religious organizations because of the situation I have just directed attention.

I hold my membership in our church here in this area, W the Washington Seventh Day Baptist Church. We have s those churches in my State of West Virginia. At an earlier held my membership in the Salem, W. Va., Seventh Day Church.

I invite the attention of my able colleague to the fact th State of New Jersey there are many, many Seventh Day churches. In places like Shiloh, Marlboro, and Plainfield being the headquarters of the denomination to which I belong close to New York City, but actually located in the State Jersey.

astor in this area, Rev. Delmer Van Horne, has expressed nd distress that there are certain faiths that are having

, with reference to a possible inability of employers on ns to adjust work schedules to fit the requirements of the of their workers.

The District Judge found that the compulsory overtime provision of

L. Ed. 2d 965 (1963); but this case involved state, and not private act

In reaching his decision that the collective bargaining agreement disc against Dewey, the District Judge applied retroactively Regulati

Dewey had been discharged and after the arbitrator and the Mi Rights Commission had rejected Dewey's charges.

[4] In our opinion, it would have been more appropriate for the Dist to have applied the EEOC Regulation 1605.1 which was in force at t Dewey's discharge, and which became effective June 15, 1966.

The 1966 regulation contained the following provisions which rest obligation upon the part of the employer to accommodate to the r religious needs of his employees:

Section 1605.1(a):

"(3) However, the Commission believes that an employer is free u VII to establish a normal work week (including paid holidays) ge plicable to all employees, notwithstanding that this schedule may c with uniformity in its effect upon the religious observances of his empl example, an employer who is closed for business on Sunday does not dis merely because he requires that all his employees be available for Saturday."

Section 1605.1(b):

"(3) The employer may prescribe the normal work week and foresee time requirements, and, absent an intent on the part of the employ criminate on religious grounds, a job applicant or employee who ac job knowing or having reason to believe that such requirements will with his religious obligations is not entitled to demand any alterati requirements to accommodate his religious needs."

The 1967 regulation, retroactively applied by the District Court, d above quoted language and other material parts of the 1966 regul instead of providing definite guidelines for the assistance of employers be affected, left the matter largely on an ad hoc basis for the deci Commission on the particular facts of each case.

[5] It is clear that Reynolds complied with the 1966 regulation T tions contained in the collective bargaining contract, which were the regulations of EEOC then in effect, ought not to be impaired by tion of a subsequently passed inconsistent regulation.

[6] The District Judge took into account his ex post facto applicat of from the date of his discharge, holding that this date was a rea after the 1967 regulation became effective for the company to work the employ of Reynolds. Having a lawful right at the time to discha under the 1966 regulations, Reynolds ought not to be required to re at a later date and pay his back salary merely because EEOC decided the rule by adopting new, inconsistent regulations. The rights of on for Dewey's discharge was not discrimination on account of his s because he violated the provisions of the collective bargaining ered into by his union with his employer, which provisions were lly to all employees. The violation consisted not only of his refus- n Sundays, but also his refusing to arrange for a replacement, alternate procedure. He did arrange for five replacements, but ven to do this, claiming that it was a sin. He apparently did not ful for him to collect wages from an employer who was compelled ertime production in order to meet its contractual commitments meet its payroll.

Dewey's demands would require Reynolds to discriminate against yees by requiring them to work on Sundays in the place of Dewey. g Dewey of his contractual obligation. This would constitute un- ation of the collective bargaining agreement among the employees, te chaotic personnel problems and lead to grievances and addi- ons. The practice of permitting the employee, rather than the em- re the replacement served to insulate the employer against any ual naming of replacements.

if the 1967 regulations are applied, we think that Reynolds com- ion 1605.1(b) thereof by making a reasonable accommodation to eeds of its employees when it permitted Dewey, by the replace- to observe Sunday as his Sabbath.[1] He stubbornly refused to rivilege. The finding of the District Court that Reynolds did not le accommodations to the religious needs of Dewey is not sup- untial evidence and is clearly erroneous. Rule 52(a) Fed. R. Civ. P. Court referred to the inalienable right of freedom of religion, is protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the d the Civil Rights Act. The employer did not question Dewey's n of religion; Reynolds did question Dewey's right to practice his on it and to interfere with the operation of its plant.

Effect of the arbitration

It is clear that if the arbitrator of the grievances had granted [illegible] Dewey, instead of to Reynolds, the award would have been final, [illegible] conclusive on Reynolds. Reynolds would not have been permitted to re[illegible] award in the courts. This is the teaching of the United Steelwork[illegible] which clearly defined the respective functions of the courts and the [illegible] United Steelworkers of America v. American Mfg. Co., 363 U.S. 564 [illegible] S. Ct. 1347 to 1348, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1403 to 1408 363 U.S. 574 to 592, 80 S [illegible] to 1358, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1409 to 1423, 363 U.S. 593 to 602, 80 S. In Steelworkers, the Court said:

"When the judiciary undertakes to determine the merits of a griev[illegible] the guise of interpreting the grievance procedure of collective bargai[illegible] ments, it usurps a function which under that regime is entrusted to [illegible] tion tribunal." (id. at 569, 80 S.Ct. at 1347)

[10] The arbitrator had jurisdiction to determine the grievances. T[illegible] tion involved an interpretation of the collective bargaining agreeme[illegible] spect to Dewey's claims that he had been laid off and discharged be[illegible] religious beliefs. In arbitration proceedings, frequently questions of la[illegible] are resolved by the arbitrator. Where the grievances are based on a [illegible] civil rights violation, and the parties consent to arbitration by a mu[illegible] able arbitrator, in our judgment the arbitrator has a right to finally [illegible] them. Any other construction would bring about the result presen[illegible] stant case, namely, that the employer, but not the employee, is bo[illegible] arbitration.

This result could sound the death knell to arbitration of labor disp[illegible] has been so usefully employed in their settlement. Employers would [illegible] clined to agree to arbitration clauses in collective bargaining agreeme[illegible] provide only a one-way street, i.e., that the awards are binding on [illegible] on their employees.

The tremendous increase in civil rights litigation leads one to the belief [illegible] Act will be used more frequently in labor disputes. Such use ought not [illegible] the efficacy of arbitration.

[11] The question in our case is not whether arbitration and re[illegible] courts could be maintained at the same time; rather our case involves [illegible] tion whether suit may be brought in court after the grievance has [illegible] adjudicated by arbitration.

We see no good analogy between jurisdiction of the National Labor [illegible] Board and that of EEOC. The Labor Board has adjudicatory powers [illegible] fair labor practices, subject only to judicial review. Orders of the [illegible] be vacated on review only when they are not supported by substan[illegible] upon consideration of the record as a whole. EEOC, on the other [illegible] such power. The District Court considers EEOC cases de novo. The [illegible] history, from which we have previously quoted, indicates the reas[illegible] difference.

Nor do we find any national policy for ousting arbitrators of [illegible] finally determine grievances initiated by employees, based on alleg[illegible] of their civil rights.

The defendant contends that it did not intentionally discharge t because of his religious beliefs contrary to Section 706(a) of the C Act of 1964, but rather for the reason that plaintiff was insubordina ing to accept his shift assignment under the circumstances of this as with his failure to perform his duties as a foreman in the position was assigned.

The parties have stipulated and the court is in agreement, that the it tion which must be resolved is "did the defendant discharge the pla lation of Section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964?"

The defendant contends that it was not its intention to violate the did it discharge the plaintiff because of his religious belief, but solely his failing to work the hours assigned to him.

Section 2000e-2 Title 42 U.S.C. provides:

(a) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employe

"(1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensa conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's religion, sex, or national origin * * *."

Under Section 713(a) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Equal Opportunity Commission is clothed with authority from time to amend or rescind procedural regulations to carry out the provisions Such regulations must be in conformity with the standards and the Administrative Procedure Act, Title 5 § 500 et seq. U.S.C. In acc such provision the Commission issued and published two sets of "Discrimination Guidelines" one effective on June 15, 1966, and the July 10, 1967, which are set out in their entirety in appendices A are made a part hereof. These guidelines were in effect at the time tiff's transfer to the second shift, and at the time of his discharge.

The plaintiff relies heavily upon the regulations promulgated by Employment Opportunity Commission, and he cites numerous cases that the regulations issued by an agency charged with the admin statute should be given great weight by the courts in their interpre statute. Udall v. Tallman, et al., 380 U.S. 1 (1965). We do not disagree recognized principle of law. Such regulations to be valid must be in conformity with the Act which authorizes their issuance and with and limitations set forth in the Administrative Procedure Act, Tit et seq. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e–12.

Paragraph (e) of the Commission's July 10, 1967, guidelines states:

the Commission has no right to say to this court that it shall shift

When plaintiff accepted employment with the defendant, he signed a c

Although the plaintiff contends that Dewey v. Reynolds Metals Co., 42 (6th Cir. 1970), is to be distinguished both factually and legally from now before us, we must respectfully disagree. Dewey, because of his beliefs, refused to perform overtime labor when, under the rules of his he was required to do so. He was discharged because of his refusal to Sunday. At the time of his discharge there was a contract in force bet labor organization to which Dewey belonged and Reynolds. This ag provided:

"All employees shall be obligated to perform all straight time and overti required of them by the Company except when an employee has a s and justifiable reason for not working * * *."

Following his discharge Dewey filed grievances which were subsequ mitted to arbitration. The arbitrator ruled adversely to Dewey holding his duty to perform the work required. After obtaining a like ruling Michigan Civil Rights Commission Dewey filed a charge with the Equal ment Opportunity Commission alleging religious discrimination. The sion then authorized the bringing of suit under Title VII of the Civil R of 1964. The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit found nothing disc in the provision of the collective bargaining contract or in the manner Reynolds executed it. The Court stated at page 330:

"The reason for Dewey's discharge was not discrimination on acc religion; it was because he violated the provisions of the collective agreement entered into by his union with his employer, which provis applicable equally to all employees. The violation consisted not only of ing to work on Sundays but also his refusing to arrange for a re which was an alternate procedure."

We are unable to draw a distinction between the Dewey case and the case, so far as the legal principles involved are concerned, because the fact required a member to work overtime or on Sunday, if necessary.
if it is a violation of an employee's constitutional rights for the em pare him to work overtime or to work on Sunday, it would equally be a of his constitutional rights for the union to attempt to enforce such agreement.

The most recent expression on the subject is found in Dawson v.
Supp. 511 (E.D. Va. 1971). Dawson was a mail carrier and a Seventh gentist. He was discharged by the postmaster for failure to work

The Court took no infringement of plaintiff's rights concerning associate."

The testimony reveals that it was the policy of the defendant to

EEOC ADOPTS NEW GUIDELINES ON RELIGIOUS DISCRIMINATION

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission today announced it lines concerning the observance of the Sabbath and other religious h they relate to discrimination in employment.

The Guidelines, effective immediately, state:

The duty not to discriminate on religious grounds, required under T includes an obligation on the part of the employer to make reas modations to the religious needs of employees when such obligation place undue hardship on the employer's business.

To illustrate, the Guidelines say that an undue hardship may exis employee's needed work cannot be performed by another employee d absence of the Sabbath observer.

The Commission recognizes the sensitive nature of discharging or to hire an employee or applicant on account of his religious beliefs. U new Guidelines, the employer has the burden of proving that an und ship prevents him from making reasonable accommodations to the needs of the employee.

In an effort to equitably apply the Guidelines the Commission will case on an individual basis since a variety of situations arise out of religious practices.

The Guidelines apply to cases before the Commission as well as to in the future. They substitute for those issued June 14, 1966.

The Commission undertook a review of the 1966 guidelines after charges were filed raising the question whether it is religious discri to discharge or refuse to hire employees who regularly observe a d than Sunday as the Sabbath and certain religious holidays and do on such days.

The new Guidelines were proposed and publicly announced on May § 1604.5 Employment agencies.

(a) Section 703(b) of the Civil Rights Act specifically states tha unlawful for an employment agency to discriminate against any i cause of sex. The Commission has determined that private employm which deal exclusively with one sex are engaged in an unlawful practice, except to the extent that such agencies limit their servic ing employees for particular jobs for which sex is a bona fide occupa fication.

(b) An employment agency that receives a job order containing sex specification will share responsibility with the employer placing if the agency fills the order knowing that the sex specification is no bona fide occupational qualification. However, an employment agenc deemed to be in violation of the law, regardless of the determination ployer, if the agency does not have reason to believe that the exi of bona fide occupations qualification is without substance and makes and maintains a written record available to the Commission job order. Such record shall include the name of the employer, the d the job and the basis for the employer's claim of bona fide qualification.

(c) It is the responsibility of employment agencies to keep informed and decisions of the Commission on sex discrimination.

§ 1604.6 Pre-employment inquiries as to sex.

A pre-employment inquiry may ask "Male_____, Female_____"; or Miss," provided that the inquiry is made in good faith for a non-di purpose. Any pre-employment inquiry in connection with prospective which expresses directly or indirectly any limitation, specification nation as to sex shall be unlawful unless based upon a bona fide qualification.

§ 1604.7 Relationship of Title VII to the Equal Pay Act.

(a) Title VII requires that its provisions be harmonized with the Act (section 6(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, 29 U.S. order to avoid conflicting interpretations or requirements with res tions to which both statutes are applicable. Accordingly, the Com prefix section 703(h) to mean that the standards of "equal pay for set forth in the Equal Pay Act for determining what is unlawful d compensation are applicable to Title VII. However, it is the jud Commission that the employee coverage of the prohibition against d in compensation because of sex is co-extensive with that of the other in section 703, and is not limited by section 703(h) to those employ by the Fair Labor Standards Act.

(b) Accordingly, the Commission will make applicable to equal pay fied under Title VII the relevant interpretations of the Administra and Hour Division, Department of Labor. These interpretations are Code of Federal Regulations, Part 800.119–800.163. Relevant opinion

It is also recognized that professionally developed tests, whe junction with other tools of personnel assessment and compliance programs of job design, may significantly aid in the development nance of an efficient work force and, indeed, aid in the utilization an tion of human resources generally.

(b) An examination of charges of discrimination filed with the and an evaluation of the results of the Commission's compliance revealed a decided increase in total test usage and a marked increase testing practices which, based on our experience, tend to have effects. In many cases, persons have come to rely almost exclusively the basis for making the decision to hire, transfer, promote, grant train, refer or retain, with the result that candidates are selected the basis of a single test score. Where tests are so used, minority c quently experience disproportionately high rates of rejection by fa score levels that have been established as minimum standards for Such evidence shall be lications of possible discrimination, such as instances of higher or minority candidates than nonminority candidates. Further- nically feasible, a test should be validated for each minority h it is used; that is, any differential rejection rates that may test, must be relevant to performance on the jobs in question. "technically feasible" as used in these guidelines means having fficient number of minority individuals to achieve findings of ractical significance, the opportunity to obtain unbiased job eria, etc. It is the responsibility of the person claiming absence bility to positively demonstrate evidence of this absence. f a test's validity should consist of empirical data demonstrat- is predictive of or significantly correlated with important ele- ehavior which comprise or are relevant to the job or jobs for are being evaluated.

However, where job so nearly automatic, or the time span is such that higher level s' potential may be expected to change in significant ways, it d that candidates are being evaluated for a job at or near the point is made to underscore the principle that attainment of a higher level job is a relevant criterion in validating employ when there is a high probability that persons employed will in higher level job within a reasonable period of time.

(2) Where a test is to be used in different units of a multiunit o and no significant differences exist between units, jobs, and applicant evidence obtained in one unit may suffice for the others. Similarly validation process requires the collection of data throughout a multi zation, evidence of validity specific to each unit may not be required also be instances where evidence of validity is appropriately obtained than one company in the same industry. Both in this instance and data collected throughout a multiunit organization, evidence of val to each unit may not be required: Provided, That no significant diffe between units, jobs, and applicant populations.

§ 1607.5 Minimum standards for validation.

(a) For the purpose of satisfying the requirements of this par evidence in support of a test's validity must be based on studies e erally accepted procedures for determining criterion-related valid those described in "Standards for Educational and Psychologica Manuals" published by American Psychological Association, 120 NW., Washington, D.C. 20036. Where a validity study is conducted in which tests are adm present employees, the sample must be representative of the minority rently included in the applicant population. If it is not technically to clude minority employees in validation studies conducted on the p force, the conduct of a validation study without minority candida relieve any person of his subsequent obligation for validation when minority candidates becomes technically feasible.

In another particular case, in their zealousness, they work against an employee of a small company that finished pl They had perhaps a dozen or 15 girls working on these pl These girls belonged to a union. They said that he was dis against because he did not belong to the Photo Finishers U was not causing any trouble, but the civil rights investig these people in for a hearing and forced the union to admit as a member of the Photo Finishers Union.

The company, in an effort to solve the problems, did awa services of the janitor and hired a janitorial service to ta building.

I know these are instances that indicated a genuine co genuine concern is there, but I do not believe that a board a tendency to be biased by political appointment, by interest on such a board, should be the ones that would issue cease orders, or be the ones that would act as prosecutors in the cases.

In my experience in working closely with this matter at level I know it is not an undue hardship to cite these people and I think they should be cited into court if they are not the legalities of the statute. I think it was a mistake that have enforcement powers in the law prior to this time, and I want to see it enforced, but I think it will work to the ge faction of all concerned, not only the employee and the em also the board itself if the Commission is permitted to go di court to file, as lawyers have filed for centuries, their comp ing this person the right to be in court, to be heard, to be the accuser, and to be given the opportunity to have a co made which is appealable, and not a trial de novo, which co in the other instance.

I cannot help but feel that in a campaign year there will be who will vote here because they think they are doing labo favor or minority groups a great favor by saying, "You and issue your own orders." I do not believe they are doi favor. I think they are doing them a disservice. nt, I am delighted to support amendment No. 611 offered uished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) to pront and fair method for enforcing the rights of those afair employment practices.
Civil Rights Act of 1964 the Equal Employment Oppor-ssion was given authority to investigate complaints of discrimination in employment and to try to resolve grievances through conciliation procedures. The Commission had no mandate to enforce fair employment practices and I believe that deficiency should be remedied.

In restructuring the functions of the Commission, I feel that we should have two goals in mind—the establishment of a procedure which is both fair and efficient.

The public is entitled to have its business handled by Government in an efficient manner. One of the criticisms most often aimed at administrative agencies is that they are notorious in their inefficiency in handling the caseload before them. For example, it has been estimated that the median time in days elapsed in processing NLRB unfair labor practice cases, from filing to decision, amounted to 32[illegible] days in 1970. The present EEOC complaint disposition requires from 18 to 24 months. I do not feel that it is fair for the Government agencies to keep either respondents or complainants waiting years before matters in which they are vitally interested are disposed. In restructuring Government agencies such as the EEOC it is incumbent upon Congress to show some imagination to fashion procedure that will provide for a speedy resolution of pending business.

Equally important is that the procedures be equitable. Fundamental to our system of justice is fairness. In our desire to achieve equal employment opportunity we must be fair to both the respondent and complainant. We cannot forsake the principle that anyone charged with violating the law is presumed innocent until proven guilty. He is entitled to be tried by an impartial tribunal. This calls for a disinterested party sitting as the judge of the case. The policeman and the prosecutor cannot sit as judge. If fairness is to be achieved, we must divide the function of prosecution from the function of adjudication.

My objection to S. 2515 as written is not with its objective but with its proposed means for achieving the stated end. Under S. 2515 the EEOC would be able to issue a complaint, to conduct hearings, to issue cease-and-desist orders, and to include in an order such things as demands for reinstatement for back pay, or for the company to report regularly to EEOC on how it is complying with the order. This approach is not fair in that it gives the EEOC czar-like powers of policeman, prosecutor, judge and jury. It violates the fundamental demand for separation of these powers.

Nor would efficiency be served under the provisions of S. 2515. If the EEOC is unable to handle the case load under the present arrangement, there seems little likelihood it could expeditiously dispose of additional responsibilities. It would take an enormous number of new employees and attorneys to handle this case load and it could easily take as long as 3 years before a case is disposed.

In the alternative, the Dominick proposal to empower the EEOC to sue in district courts when conciliatory efforts fail would achieve the objective of strengthening enforcement of equal employment opportunity under a fair and efficient procedure. Fairness is promoted under the district court approach by separating the functions of the policeman, the prosecutor, and the judge. A fair trial and due process are guaranteed to the accused.

Cases could be handled much more efficiently under a court enforced system. Whereas it now requires from 18 to 24 months to dispose of an EEOC case, the median time interval, from issue to trial for nonjury trials in U.S. district courts in 1970 was 10 months according to the annual report of the Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

In sum, I believe Senator Dominick's amendment to strike all EEOC cease-and-desist language and substitute therefor language allowing the EEOC to file civil actions in Federal district court if they are unable to conciliate the dispute will enhance the workability of S. 2515. This method will combine the EEOC's expertise in investigating, conciliating, and prosecuting unlawful employment cases with due process guarantees available only in impartial courts, a much more fair approach which I urge my colleagues in the Senate to support.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. Just prior to the Senator's appearance in the Chamber today, the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin), in a colloquy with the manager of the bill, pointed out that President Roosevelt created a commission to look into the executive agencies to determine what should be done about them. Justice Jackson in referring to the findings of this Commission emphasized that the first thing that should be done is to separate the prosecutory, the investigatory, and adjudicatory functions. My recollection is that Mr. Landis said the same thing when he was made the head of a similar commission.

What I am trying to do is one portion, and only one portion of what these eminent commissions have already recommended and to which the Senator from Tennessee referred. I appreciate the support of the Senator from Tennessee. I hope we can generate enough support to establish a precedent in this bill against the easy but irresponsible delegation of important judicial powers and authority to nonelected administrative officials when such powers and authority clearly belongs in our Federal courts.

I thank the Senator for his remarks.

It is a step into the saloon, though, as it misleads many p believing that an independent General Counsel actually wi will do no such thing. Its chief accomplishment will be a salve for the conscience of cease-and-desist proponents an rather skimpy bone to respondents whose due process r

An independent General Counsel is not the panacea for desist enforcement because it does not even address itself

The imminence of court action, coupled with the threat

A further factor that must be considered when determ

Not only does the independent General Counsel fail to rem cease defects, it fails to effectively accomplish its one avowed the separation of the prosecutory and adjudicatory functi to accomplish a medium of impartiality. Consider the follow and then decide for yourself whether the General Counsel an independent and separate body.

First, the amendment is not clear whether the General C office would be placed in the Commission offices, but it is assu it would be. Also, the amendment is silent as to who would salaries of the Counsel, but once again, I assume that the Co would. Although the amendment's silence on the above two confusing, some of the things it does say are even more co Language in the newly added section 705(b) expressly indi no employer or agent of the Commission may engage in both ti cution and adjudication of the same case—clearly an attempt rate the two functions. Yet, the same section 705(b) gives th man concurrence power in the appointing of regional attorney language in the bill gives the General Counsel concurrence over the appointment of regional directors. It is absurd to claim that the adjudicatory institution is stantially and directly involved in the investigatory proces through recommending the filing of the complaint and s to reach an impartial decision. The distinguished Senator fr Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) last Friday cited Justice Jackson's Wong Yang Sung against McGrath as requiring the separa vestigatory and adjudicatory functions to achieve a "gen partial hearing conducted with critical detachment." I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota with regard to t area of equal employment in the State of Minnesota, through period of public service in that State, where he served as general, it is my understanding that that State has an equa ment commission and that it is armed with exactly what we to do here; namely, an effective and fair enforcement thro and desist.

Mr. MONDALE. The Senator is correct. As a matter of fact nearly 5 years as attorney general in my State of Minnesota to say that any administrative tribunal which did not have desist powers almost invariably came to the State legislatur this:

If you do not give us these powers, we are a second cousin as an adm tribunal. We cannot do our job.

Time and again, the State legislature has responded to granted such powers.

The remarkable thing is that, under the present system at eral level, if we have a commercial dispute surrounding, sa ties, then we get the full range of administrative remedies. If a labor dispute—a labor-management dispute on either side and-desist powers are to be found. If we have a dispute Department of Transportation before one of the tribunals, cease-and-desist powers. We are dealing with basic, fund human rights: The right to a job, the right to challenge the employment on the grounds of color. And the only right we is that if we do not use the traditional court system, we must b to come before a Commission which does not have the power to more than conciliate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the Senator.

EDURAL DUE PROCESS IN ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS

INTRODUCTION

Employment Opportunities Act of 1971 (S. 2515), EEOC is given ease-and-desist enforcement procedures to provide it with powers currently held by other Federal regulatory agencies. Opponents ype of enforcement approach argue that placing administrative cedures in the EEOC would deny parties due process of law, he quality of justice available in the proceedings, and would wer in one agency.

I that the above-stated objections are totally groundless and do count either the procedural safeguards specifically provided by Administrative Procedure Act (hereinafter APA), the quality e hearings, or the quality of judicial review available to all eterminations.

PROCEDURAL DUE PROCESS

rative hearing procedure clearly guarantees procedural due rties. While the importance of due process has been specifically urts,[1] the courts have also noted that the concept of due process inflexible standard. It has been well-recognized that the same licable to due process in the courts do not necessarily apply al or quasi-judicial proceedings.[2] ent by Justice Douglas in Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee v. 123, 71 S. Ct. 624 (1951): "Notice and opportunity to be heard are e process of law. . . . It is not without significance that most of the Bill of Rights are procedural. It is procedure that spells much of the ule by law and rule by whim or caprice."

Wilson, Inc. v. FCC, 170 F.2d 802 (D.C. App. 1948) where the court process is not necessarily judicial process." (emphasis added).

Although the term due process cannot be precisely defined to c circumstances where it may be found, its general elements can b

Types of Civil Cases

se in actions under special Federal statutes explains a good ll growth in filings. For example, there were 3,985 civil rights pared to 2,453 the previous year, an increase of 63 percent.
ore cases were filed under the civil commitment provisions of

Title III of the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966 (P.L. 89 ber 8, 1966). There were 3,268 N.A.R.A. commitments in 1970; 1969. Suits under the Securities, Commodities and Exchange Act in 796 in 1969, to 1,211 in 1970—a 52 percent hike. More prisoner p State and Federal, were filed than ever before. State prisoner petitio for 11,812 suits; Federal prisoner petitions for 4,185. This repres tively, an increase of 27 and 16 percentage points above the pr prisoner fillings of 9,612 State and 3,612 Federal.

[1] Percent change since fiscal year 1968 when Title III, N.A.R.A. took effect.

The accompanying chart [not printed in the Record] shows the p distribution of the major classes of civil suits.

In addition to the above noted 1-year increase in other civil categ actions increased overall by 15 percent with marine contract and M sharing most of this. Personal injury suits climbed only slightly.
Property damage suits were up 23 percent. A small but notewor occurred in motor vehicle injury suits.

Real property actions continued to show a decline with Governm foreclosures decreasing by 19 percent and land condemnations by 14 p

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD OFFICE OF THE GENERAL COUNSEL
Washington, D.C., September

Mr. DONALD ELISBURG, Counsel,
Senate Labor Subcommittee, New Senate Office Building, Washington

DEAR MR. ELISBURG: In accordance with our telephone conversation I am enclosing time elapsed data that you requested.

Please note that Table 2 sets out the latest data that we have available in the area of court processing time.

We are presently incorporating court time-elapsed data into our data processing system for reporting on a monthly basis. Thus, in future, we will be able to supply this material on a current basis.

If I may be of further assistance, please feel free to contact me (ext. 5072).

Sincerely,

MILFORD C. CLEVELAND

Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

MS. I yield.

The Senator is aware that the Supreme Court of the has held that Congress is without constitutional power urisdiction to an administrative or quasi-judicial body ight of review in Federal courts, is he not?

MS. Well, of course, and that is provided clearly in the ore the Senate.

So this measure recognizes that there can be a review courts even under the bill as introduced by the distinor from New Jersey.

MS. Well, certainly. It is abundantly clear that all the nanded by the Constitution are a part of this legislation.

This bill would extend the jurisdiction of the Commis-ring practices of every businessman who employs as employees, would it not?

MS. That is correct.

And that would bring millions of additional people rage of the bill, would it not?

MS. Yes.

Not only that, but this bill would extend the coverage all employees of all the States and local subdivisions ld it not?

MS. Yes. And I wonder, if we are going to have an upport of the amendment here, whether the Senator some time.

I have no time. If the Senator will yield me some time, d to have it.

Mr. Williams. Well, if it is in support of the amen Senator can seek the generosity of the Senator from Colo is the Senator's wish?

Mr. Ervin. I wanted to ask the Senator if this bill does the coverage of this act——

Mr. Williams. Fortunately, yes.

Mr. Ervin (continuing). To millions of additional em private industry, and at least 10 million employees of State subdivisions of States.

Mr. Williams. I say gratefully, yes.

Mr. Ervin. It also enables the political hands of Caesar upon the sacred things of God. And each one of these cases of these things occur is subject to be reviewed in the Federa it not?

Mr. Williams. I would say that equality of rights has do with Caesar, and maybe had more to do with God.

Mr. Ervin. I would say you do not get equality of rights the majority of their rights, and that is what this bill wi majority of the people of this country. But apart from tha

Mr. Ervin. But apart from that question, every one of th arises affecting any one of the millions of additional employ vate industry which are brought under the bill and the mo million State and local employees would be subject to be re the Federal courts under the bill in its unamended form, w not?

Mr. Williams. The appeals procedure is here, and the co peals is written in clearly as the court of review.

Mr. Ervin. So this will increase rather than diminish th the Federal courts, regardless of whether the amendment o tinguished Senator from Colorado is adopted or rejected, w

Mr. Williams. The Senator, of course, knows that Ch Burger was referring to the case load in district trial courts

Mr. Ervin. Which goes to show that when a man gets to eral judge he is just like every other man who gets a Fe The first thing he wants to do is have his duties lightened next thing he wants is to have his salary increased. This Federal judges are as human as other people.

Mr. Williams. I am not going to argue that. When we caseload of the district courts, which has been included ord at the request of the Senator from New York, I am the fact that from the inception of a case in the State of N to its conclusion, the time has now reached 29 months. I am of that. Justice delayed, it has been said by wiser author this Senator, is justice denied. Twenty nine months is a time in the district courts of the State of New Jersey.

that in the State of North Carolina, in the eastern diss is the time from the filing of an action to a decision in at is too long.
ıs it may, with time running, I have no further requests hout yielding back the few minutes that I might have,
that it is suggested here, in support of this amendment, debaters, that we are introducing a monstrous and un-in this area of equal employment opportunity. This is at is being done by the legislation. A time honored pro-orcement, with all the protections for due process and ed, is exactly what we have done, a method that is being other administrative agencies of importance, that is 34 of the 38 States that have human rights commise a guarantee that there will be equal employment rom anything new. What this proposes is that the Fedıs, constitutional protections, of equal opportunity be enforcement procedures in the administrative agencies ll the economic agencies of the Federal Government, ost of the States that have human rights commissions sections.

K. I yield myself 3 minutes.
nt, I want to make some brief points. I have listened to the proponents of the system as is presently con-ill—namely, the cease-and-desist authority. So far as say that a court enforcement system would take longer and desist has been used in other cases, and therefore it for equal employment.
nk either one of these is a very compelling argument, ve testimony—which I have already referred to—that there is now a backlog of more than 20 months in the compliance and mediation cases. If you expand their ontrol by 21 million people, expand the procedural com-ving them cease-and-desist authority and say they are 00 attorneys or more—about which we have testimony—oing to do it all within their one agency, you obviously o have 20 months' delay but more than 3 years' delay.
facts I presented indicate that cease and desist procee circuit court of appeals procedure, so you have just as , if not more in the circuit courts, as you would if they s in the district courts as my amendment does. I think is not supported by the facts.
point is that in the discussion of this bill in committee, what should be done about State and local employees, hem a right to proceed through the Attorney General system and not be subject to cease-and-desist orders. We ral employees the right to go through their agency and to the Civil Service Commission Board of Appeals and the court. But in the case of private employees, this bill cannot use the court system; they cannot be like the overed under this bill. They will have to redress their ough the cease-and-desist machinery without ever get-rict court.

I do not have to make any apologies to the Senator from Y or the Senator from New York on my civil rights record. has been fairly strong. I do not recall that I have ever vo a civil rights bill in my life, and I say that in my public say that with considerable pride.

I also started out by saying that I think we do need equ ment enforcement procedure. But it seems to me that the w is not the way we are doing it here by overburdening an age already cannot keep up with its load, but by doing someth into force what almost every commission has ever said w vestigated the executive agencies: Separate their functions.

This amendment, if adopted, will separate at least the ad functions and put them into the court system. By so doing also remedy the discrimination that S. 2515 language wou on private employees.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Spong). The time of the S expired.

Mr. Dominick. I yield myself 1 additional minute.

The Senator from Minnesota mentioned the fact that S. 2 the respondent a fair appeal of his case in the court of ap President, this is not entirely true as if an employer has a cea against him and an order issued against him, under the pr and because of one reason or another he does not get around ing the Commission's order with 60 days, the findings of the sion are final, and the courts are not permitted even to whether or not there was substantial evidence of any kind t such findings, much less a preponderance of the evidence. S come final after 60 days, and neither the employer nor the has any right to challenge this.

I do not think that is proper judicial procedure. I ha doubt as to its constitutionality.

The next point I want to make is that we are adding 2 people. Let us give the chance to separate these functions enforcement procedures where they belong.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 1 min

Mr. Williams. I yield the Senator from New York 1 m

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, the Senator said something ab cease-and-desist orders being unfair because in 60 days the final. I fail to see the logic that the enforcement of a wo several years.

Let me state the case in its stark reality: The delay o the denial of justice. Respect for law is directly related forcement of law.

This is the heart of the matter. Speed and efficiency ar to the administration of justice affecting the most basic ne American—man or woman, black or white—the right to opportunity to obtain or advance in a job, without regar color, religion, sex, or national origin.

It is my firm judgment that the balance of evidence pres Senate clearly weights in favor of administrative enforcem right, as over against court enforcement, to assure that it is protected. It has been clearly established the extensive adm expertise is required in the resolution of complex problems ment discrimination under Title VII proceedings. The C acknowledged the EEOC's specialized qualifications in these problems, and EEOC opinions have been given gr in subsequent judicial interpretations and decisions.

Moreover, there is sufficient evidence that the administ proach encourages early settlement of claims and provides that is frequently so vital in resolving complaints, there alleviating the courts and providing quick relief for agg viduals. For example, of the 33,581 cases received by the Labor Relations Board in fiscal 1970, 92.4 percent were d with only the need for a formal hearing, with only 420 of the heard by hearing examiners having to be filed for review ment in the courts of appeals, and only about half of t set for oral argument.

Third, we need this unified approach, through the EEOC lems of employment discrimination, wherein decisions rendered by one agency rather than several hundred d judges. Only in this way can we achieve clear patterns i pretations and remedial approaches that are essential to t protection of Title VII rights.

The administrative process provided for under S. 2515 of EEOC efforts initially to achieve voluntary compliance by hearings under the provisions of the Administrative Act, with the incorporation of existing law relating to the of preliminary relief, and a subsequent EEOC decision a issuance of cease and desist orders, and with either party

I regard the EEOC cease-and-desist enforcement ial to guaranteeing justice to aggrieved individuals—blacks, American Indians, Chicanos, and members of groups who continue to wait for the fulfillment of re basic to making a reality of the promise of America.

. Mr. President, when the Congress passed Title VII ghts Act of 1964, it created the Equal Employment mmission to help those people who believe they have unfair employment practices because of their race, ex, or national origin. As prescribed by that law, the EEOC are limited to investigating, mediating, and ed instances of discriminatory employment practices. II did not provide the Commission with a mechanism dings and redress legitimate grievances.

question which the Senate must answer today is expansion of the jurisdiction and functions of the ake: Should the Commission be empowered to take n cases into the Federal district courts, or should it be e cease-and-desist orders unilaterally?

I am convinced that the district court approach is the administrative approach. Court enforcement is vides greater protection for both plaintiff and des administrative enforcement. It separates the funcho prosecute and those who judge. It assures due

Unlike a district court decision in favor of the dings, which would be immediately enforceable, encease-and-desist order issued by the EEOC would the appropriate Federal court of appeals. It would that the enforcement approach involving only one s superior to that involving two.

This kind of expertise found in either the personnel or legal arms of corporations, a terms of conciliations is often an impasse, with the responde unable to understand the problem in the same way that the G ceives it.

I am not suggesting that because it may have been or unknowing, an act of job discrimination should be to saying such cases ought to be treated differently than discrimination.

The problem here is not one of simply assigning blam ing remedy but of defining what constitutes a violation first place and of constructing a solution which takes a the circumstances. I believe that kind of question should to the full processes of a court of law.

Mr. President, the purpose of the bill before us is to go conciliation in achieving equal job opportunities, but we m the mistake of moving to the opposite pole of confronta end, the success of our efforts will not depend on the degr ity we bestow on some Federal agency but on our abilit climate of cooperation and understanding in dealing wi plex problem. I do not believe we further that goal by due process to a defendant who may not recognize his culpa case and may not even perceive that a wrong has been done.

In my opinion, there is a basis for distinguishing in the acts in which there is an element of knowing or willfulne which are the unintended and unperceived results of an systems. The first may properly be the object of cease-and ers, but the latter in my judgment is not. Unfortunately, th us makes no such distinction.

While I believe in legislation to improve enforcement opportunities, I will vote for the amendment offered by from Colorado as an improvement in the bill before us.

Mr. President, I have called up amendment No. 809, trikes one word out of the bill as presently before the loes a whole lot more than knock out a word. It changes the bill in a very important particular.

One of the most horrendous provisions of S. 2515 is sec

So that the only exemption that is given to religious associations or corporations is with respect to the employ dividuals to perform work connected with their religious

In other words, Mr. President, in the case of an educatio tion sponsored by a church group, the provisions of the bill the Senate would protect that religious association or school or society in the employment of people of its own carrying on the religious activities of that association or or school. If it were a college supported by the Catholic the Baptist Church or the Episcopal Church, the bill as would protect it only as to the employment of someone fo it to carry on its religious activity. So that in a church school, if the Baptist supported school wanted to emplo to teach theology or if a Catholic supported school wante a Catholic to teach theology, it would be protected.

But as to all its other activities, there would be no prote the provisions of the bill, there would be nothing to prev being forced upon a religious school to teach some subject theology. A religious school would not like to have a people of a different faith teaching other subjects and right to be selective in the choice of its faculty only to
of the work carrying out its religious activities.

The present law goes on from that, though, and says educational institution shall be exempt from EEOC in on of its educational work, but the present bill removes tion. Religious schools are protected under the present tional institutions, so that they are exempt. But if the mitted is passed and becomes law, religious schools would from the provisions of the EEOC Act only insofar as the tains to the carrying on of religious activities. The educ tivity would not be exempt.

believe that is a correct statement.

Can the Senator from Alabama reconcile that analysis tion of the United States with a bill which says that a which is politically appointed shall have jurisdiction practices of every State and every political subdivision n the Union?

Appointed at the Federal level?

hat is correct.

I would certainly feel that is not consistent with Chief statement.

To come down to a question of definition, I do not know the terms of this act. This is correct, but perhaps the ew Jersey can enlighten us on this point. The Governor ina is employed by the State of North Carolina. Does the EEOC has jurisdiction to compel the people of to elect or employ a Governor who happens to be a inority race or a member of a religious minority or a s a national origin different from the majority of the Carolina?

I would certainly resist any such construction being y provision of the bill.

This legislation has no provision, does it, which would

The bill is broad enough, and it would be if amended, is made an employer, to cover any individuals employed y a political subdivision of a State. It would cover all l positions in the State government.

The Senator is correct.

North Carolina, for example, has superior judges who, endation of the clerk of the superior court, appoint peace, and the justices of the peace exercise part of the of the State. So, we would have an agency here in the gton which would have the jurisdiction to say that a judge in the State of North Carolina and the clerk of rt of North Carolina, if they prefer to appoint a person that belongs to the same race as the justice of the peace is person belonging to another race or if they prefer to appoint justice of the peace who has a religion similar to theirs in pre a man who does not have a religion similar to theirs or any whatever, would violate the act.

Mr. ALLEN. It looks as if under a strict interpretation of Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, in the dictionary the word "dis means to make a clear distinction, to distinguish, to differen time a State employee is chosen by a State official acting for where there are a number of applicants for the position, he distinguishes or differentiates or makes a distinction betwe he appoints and the ones he refuses to appoint.

Mr. ALLEN. It would seem too, the Senator is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. And so if he preferred to appoint and did person of a particular race, a particular religion, or a part in preference to another person of any other religion or an or the other sex, he would violate this act.

Mr. ALLEN. It would seem to be a strong argument.

Mr. ERVIN. Is there any doubt in the mind of the Sen Alabama that the word "discriminate" means that the State official discriminates when he prefers one man over an or a woman?

Mr. ALLEN. If the preference is wrongful.

Mr. ERVIN. I am assuming that both people have the same tions.

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. Not only that, but I am not exaggerating w that this bill authorizes the Federal Government to lay the hands of Caesar upon the things that belong to God.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. Our amendment would strike out the word " and remove religious institutions in all respects from sub
the EEOC.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is correct, and that would not be a from the present law. It leaves the present law as it is. It allow an extension of control by EEOC over educational institutions.

Mr. ERVIN. We have a college in North Carolina known as D College that is affiliated with the Southern Presbyterian Davidson College is supported by the fees of its students voluntary contributions of people interested in its activities supported in any respect by the Federal Government. I ha had the honor to serve as a member of the board of trust

This college was founded and is controlled by people who

It seems to the junior Senator from Alabama to be a nd logical requirement.

Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Alabama whether, isions of this bill, it would not be made illegal for a

s. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?
am delighted to yield.

s. May I have the hypothesis here? What is the hypothator from North Carolina? Is this an institution of

It is an institution of learning which is affiliated with Presbyterian Church, and which conducts a college de-Christian education at the hands of Christian teachers

s. That is contrary to what this amendment does.

ask that the Senator read the paragraph at the bottom amendment to section 702 of the Civil Rights Act of

This title shall not apply to an employer with respect to the employment aliens outside any State, or to a religious corporation, association, education institution, or society with respect to the employment of individuals of a parti lar religion to perform work connected with the carrying on by such corporati association, educational institution, or society of its religious activities.

That leaves that institution under the jurisdiction of the EEOC wi respect to everybody who does anything except teach religion. Sin the institution teaches chemistry and other nonreligious courses t EEOC has jurisdiction to deny it the right to prefer, and carry o such preference, to employ a man to teach chemistry who happens be a member of the Christian church; and can compel the institutio instead of doing that, to employ an applicant for the position wh happens to be a Mohammedan, an agnostic, or an atheist. That is wh the Senator from Alabama and I are seeking to prevent by th amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. All we are seeking to do, I say to the Senator from Ne Jersey, is knock out the limitation on the exemption, to knock ou the confining of the exemption to those having to do with carrying o its religions activities. If you knock out "religious" and leave it wid open and accept the amendment, we would have no further debate o the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would suggest to the distinguished Senator fro Alabama and the distinguished Senator from North Carolina that i the hypothesis stated the present law would protect that institutio in its desire to hire an individual of its institutional religious persu sion. This is contained in section 703(e)(2) of the law, and that not disturbed by the bill that is before us, to which the amendme is offered.

Mr. ERVIN. I disagree with the Senator. The language of the bi exempts the institutions covered only "with respect to the employme of individuals of a particular religion to perform work connected wi the carrying on by such corporation, association, educational instit tion, or society of its religious activities."

Chemistry or economics or sociology is not a religious activity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that is the situation where—I was going t say we are both right, but that is not exactly correct because I thi the Senator from North Carolina is only reading part of what we a dealing with here.

Would the Senator turn to section 703. The amendment is offered section 702. I was directing the attention of Senators to section 7 and paragraph (e)(2).

Mr. ERVIN. The exemptions in subsection (e)(2) of section 702 Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 are inconsistent with th provision to which the amendment is directed and would be nullifi by such provision, which would be subsequent in point of time.

The exemption subsection (e)(1) of section 703, of Title VII of th Civil Rights Act of 1964 does not apply because religion is not a bo fide qualification of teaching chemistry, or economics, or sociolog or any similar subjects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would the Senator read on to subsection (2)? L us read it all together.

Mr. ERVIN. I say to the Senator from New Jersey that every prov sion of this bill which is enacted into law will nullify to the extent its provisions any provision on the same subject in the original a l here this exemption on page 33 modifies the other and says that nly time they can hire a person of a particular religion is to help n in carrying out their religious activities—not educational activi-as contradistinguished from religious.

r. WILLIAMS. Would the Senator help the Senate by reading sec-703(e)(2) in the present law, and if the Senator will not, will Senator yield and let me read it?

r. ALLEN. Yes.

r. WILLIAMS. All right, Section 703(e) and within the paragraph bered (2) reads:

shall not be an unlawful employment practice for a school, college, university, her educational institution or institution of learning to hire and employ oyees of a particular religion if such school, college, university, or other ational institution or institution of learning is, in whole or in substantial owned, supported, controlled, or managed by a particular religion or by rticular religious corporation, association, or society, or if the curriculum ch school, college, university, or other educational institution or institution arning is directed toward the propagation of a particular religion.

hat is the end of the quotation of (2), and I read it all because I sk the Senator what hypothesis we were working with, and I used anguage of that section. The hypothesis, the Senator from North olina says, is exactly what is contained here, which says they can a person of a particular religion.

r. ERVIN. That is what Congress said in 1964. But it is inconsistent what lines 20 through 24 of the bill say.

r. WILLIAMS. That is the law at the present time.

r. ERVIN. But that law will be modified by this bill. The bill says title—the whole Title VII—not apply to an employer with respect to the employment of aliens outside State, or to a religious corporation, association, educational institution, or y with respect to the employment of individuals of a particular religion rform work connected with the carrying on—his is what I invite the Senator's attention to—ch corporation, association, educational institution, or society of its religious ties.

erything outside of religious activity is changed by this provision e bill.

r. ALLEN. If it is already in the present law, I wonder why the [illegible] Senator from New York is objecting to restating it again.

r. WILLIAMS. Because we are including education, and the bill re us restates section 702. It is a complete restatement, and the only tion in it is the words "educational institution."

r. ALLEN. The Senator drops out the last clause, though.

r. WILLIAMS. Yes, and that deals with educational institutions. It not have anything to do with the religious part of it. The section anguage, as it appears on page 33, is identical language with pres-aw with the exception of the addition of the two words, twice, cational institution." But I understood the Senator from Alabama not dealing with that. With his amendment he was dealing with eligious part of it.

r. ALLEN. No; and if the Senator followed my remarks, I stated ill as approved by the committee and as now being considered by Senate would cover every single school in the country. I did not ne it to religious schools.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What does the Senator's amendment say? I thought it struck just one word.

Mr. ALLEN. That is what it does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That does not deal with educational institution?

Mr. ALLEN. As the Senator said, I have added "educational institution" in two places in the amendment, so it does cover that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I read the Senator's amendment, it does only one thing—strike out "religious."

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, but we have accepted what the Senator has done by adding "educational institution" in two places in the exemption. So therefore, it is to continue the exemption that is now allowed for educational institutions; and in addition for religious institutions that are not educational institutions insofar as the work has to go with carrying on religious activity. So the amendment knocks out the one word "religious," and would protect religious corporations, associations, educational institutions, or societies in work having to do with their activities. That is all it does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is dealing only with religious educational associations——

Mr. ALLEN. No; I did not say that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not see how the Senator's amendment reaches the other educational——

Mr. ALLEN. If it does not reach them, why does the Senator not agree to accept the amendment? If he is willing to concede the religious institution point and it does not reach the other institutions, why is he concerned?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not concerned. I wondered what the Senator was trying to do. I thought he was striking the word "religious" on page 33, line 24.

Mr. ALLEN. That is what the amendment does, but it also includes the exemption that is made of granting exemptions to educational institutions in the first half of the exemption rather than in the last half, which the committee dropped. If the Senator does not object, then, to exempting the religious institutions, he would agree to accept the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot at this time accept the amendment. The reason for this legislation including the word "religious" is that we feel that this Congress should not in any way breach the constitutional demands that we do nothing to disturb religion.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator concede that the committee is trying to gain control of employment and promotion practices of all educational institutions other than religious institutions?

Mr. WILLIAMS. As far as employment is concerned, which it determines for the covered reasons, the answer is "yes."

Mr. ALLEN. In other words, the committee is trying to add to the coverage all educational institutions. Is that right?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Exactly, yes.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator from New Jersey desire to engage in any further colloquy on the amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. I just wanted to point out that on the hypothesis of the situation presented by the Senator from North Carolina, the present law permits the kind of educational institution he was talking about to hire a person of a religious faith if it wanted to, and we are not changing that law.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I would say I ould agree with the Senator from New Jersey in respect to educa- ional institutions only if the Senator from New Jersey would strike ut lines 20 through 24 on the bottom of page 33. Otherwise the Sena- or from North Carolina will insist that all the emphasis at his com- and that these lines, 20 through 24 on page 33, change the prior w and provide for exemption only for those who are directly en- aged in carrying on religious activities.

That is the inescapable conclusion of the Senator from North arolina.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I shall have to consider this matter. f there is further discussion, I would suggest that the Senator from labama proceed while I consider the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. ERVIN. I would suggest that we have a quorum call, without he Senator from Alabama losing his right to the floor.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I would be compelled to object to that. I m perfectly willing to have a quorum call, but I do not want to lock he floor up. So I object, if that request is made.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, in addition, if this section of the bill is assed—that is, section 702 as it appears in the bill—it invites a fur- her expansion and continuation of the practice of harassing local chool officials and interfering with local school systems that have en running rampant since the adoption of Title VI of the 1964 Civil ights Act. Enactment of section 3 of S. 2515 could destroy academic reedom, as suggested earlier in my remarks. Objective criticism, in- ependent judgment, the search for truth unhampered by transient olitical interests—all of which are vital to academic freedom—could e altered and reshaped by the EEOC.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that there is another matter that eeds to come before the Senate at this time, I withdraw the amend- ent and will reoffer it at a later time.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amend- ent——

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Beall). The Senator from New York uggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order or the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. JAVITS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I wish to propound a parliamentary quiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order. A parliamentary quiry is not in order during a rollcall.

Mr. SAXBE. Did I have a motion on the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order. There is a quorum ll in progress. The clerk will continue the rollcall.

The rollcall was continued.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. JAVITS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The rollcall was resumed and concluded, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen	Ervin	McClellan
Beall	Griffin	Nelson
Byrd, W.Va.	Hart	Packwood
Curtis	Javits	Saxbe
Dominick	Mansfield	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is not present.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After some delay, the following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Aiken	Ellender	Muskie
Allott	Fannin	Pastore
Anderson	Fong	Pell
Baker	Gambrell	Proxmire
Bayh	Goldwater	Ribicoff

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

(Several Senators addressed the Chair.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the Dominick amendment was rejected be reconsidered, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, is the Senator qualified in view of the fact that he voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is qualified. He did not vote.

Mr. JAVITS. May we understand why he is qualified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Because he did not vote.

Mr. JAVITS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, is time limited on this motion, and if so, y what authority?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is limited to 20 minutes under ne unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, who controls the time under the nanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio (Mr. Saxbe) and he Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) control the time. Who ields time?

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I yield back my 10 minutes.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, may we have order n the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Chair ask Senators to return to their seats?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please return to their seats. The Senator from Ohio has yielded back his time. The Senator from New Jersey has 10 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I first yield 3 minutes to the Sena- or from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recog- nized for 3 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, this is legitimate. A Senator can move o reconsider, of course. It is well known that in this present season, Members go and Members come, especially as quite a few Members are unning for the office of President. Therefore, these little games are layed, and I do not use that word in any invidious sense, because moving party has an absolute right to move at any time he can et the floor and there is no other business. Nevertheless, it is a fact hat the most opportune time can be chosen for a vote on an amend- ment as close as the Dominick amendment.

It is a great tradition, and a noble tradition, that on an important ote, we do our utmost to accommodate each other to get the maxi- mum assurance that all Senators will have an opportunity to vote. I know that I express perhaps a vain hope, but I do rise to suggest hat if we want to do this thing as it should be done—and as I say, he moving party has every right to do this—a time should be fixed for voting which would enable those who had left, under the assump- ion that this matter had been decided, to return.

Because of the fact that the moving Senator has yielded back his ime, I am not much encouraged on that score. Nonetheless, in order to pose the issue, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the motion to reconsider take place at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. DOMINICK. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I think it is essential to make that point clear to the Senate so that if an effort is made on our part to do our utmost to give an opportunity to Senators, who have already voted after a mature consideration of this very important amendment, to vote on the motion. This request should be recognized as being only the desire to treat fairly those who, as I say, assumed that for the time being the matter was disposed of, and they undertook other business which they considered to be important at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, my intention is to move to table the motion to reconsider. Certainly within the procedures, the motion offered is available to Senators. As manager of the bill I had no information that this motion would be offered. I speculated with Senators who had engagements elsewhere that this matter would not be raised today on a motion to reconsider. It has been. Of course, it is allowed under the rule. It is with personal regret, of course, that this motion has been made, because some of the Members who wanted to go all the way on this issue are not able to be present.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, as to the time for making this motion, was it not within the power of the proponents of the measure to move to reconsider the vote by which the Dominick amendment was rejected immediately after the rejection, so that the proponents of the bill could have controlled the time for voting on this motion to reconsider, had they so desired?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Any member on the prevailing side could have so moved.

Mr. ALLEN. Then did the proponents not take a calculated risk in not making that motion at that time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We took a risk, the Senator is correct.

Mr. President, if no one else wants to speak at this time in opposition to the motion to reconsider, at this time I yield back the remainder of my time and move to table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Dominick amendment was rejected. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. [illegible] of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Bible), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Gravel), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Harris), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Hartke), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hughes), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. McIntyre), the Senator from Utah (Mr. Moss), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Randolph), the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Sparkman), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hughes), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), the Senator from Utah (Mr. Moss), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Randolph), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), and the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. McIntyre) would each vote "yea."

Mr. SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) is absent on official business.

The Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cooper) is necessarily absent to attend the funeral of a friend.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Mundt) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft) is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Brock), the Senators from Kansas (Mr. Dole and Mr. Pearson), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. Griffin), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy) are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield) and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy) would each vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft) is paired with the Senator from Kansas (Mr. Dole). If present and voting, the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea" and the Senator from Kansas would vote "nay."

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Dominick amendment was rejected was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 2, lines 13 and 14, strike out the words "or in the Courts of Appeals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate on the amendment is limited to 30 minutes. The Senator from New York may proceed.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, a point of inquiry, if the Senator fro New York does not mind. I am just trying to find out if this is amendment to my amendment, or an amendment to the bill.

Mr. JAVITS. It is an amendment to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. President, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state h parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JAVITS. In view of the fact that the amendment of the Senato from Colorado strikes that part of the bill which is found betwee page 38, line 7 and page 50, line 7, are amendments in order to th part of the bill which is proposed to be stricken by the amendment o the Senator from Colorado?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In answer to the Senator's inquiry, such amendments are in order.

Mr. JAVITS. So that the Senator from New York would be privileged to amend such parts of the bill as are stricken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York can amend those parts of the bill that are proposed to be stricken by the amend ment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JAVITS. And the same time limitation would apply. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty minutes would apply.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, this amendment is directed only to th amendment by the Senator from Colorado, and it would propose to qualify the attorneys for the Commission to conduct litigations in the courts of appeals as well as the district courts.

Mr. President, while we have enough Senators in the Chamber, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and the nays were ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, this amendment would propose to allow the attorneys for the Commission to appear in the courts of appeals of the United States in respect of the scheme of enforcement which the amendment seeks to put into effect, rather than the Attorney General, and would limit the Attorney General's authority to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is my understanding that the authority of the Commission in that case would pretty well go along with the authority given to the National Labor Relations Board, which is probably a fair model of this kind of cease-and-desist order enforce ment or court enforcement which succeeds it, and would give the agency itself greater control over the litigations to which, in the final analysis, this amendment would confine it.

I might say, also, that I am advised that the Department of Labor in the Fair Labor Standards Act, presents a direct analogy to this situation.

Mr. President, it is well known that I favor the cease and desist procedure which is contained in the basic measure before the Senate and which this amendment seeks to overturn, and which has now been reconsidered.

If we are going to go into the court proceedings, it strikes me that one thing is very interesting. The argument was made that the agency to wit, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission—would have to hire a hundred lawyers, or some such number, if it sought to do everything it is required to do under our bill. With the enormous amount of litigation which is going to descend upon the Federal courts of the United States, every word which is uttered about the backlog of the agency immediately proliferates the burden upon the courts; because if the recourse of the agency is going to be to the courts, then one must expect that if it is going to have any teeth, so that it can bring about conciliation and compromise in respect of the many complaints which might be brought in to the Commission, it would have to engage in an enormous number of litigations.

Talk about vexation. That has been the main argument made on this whole proposition. The vexation and the expense which respondents will go to in the thousands of cases which the Commission has will be absolutely unbelievable if this tremendous burden of literally thousands of cases is thrown upon the courts. As we argued earlier, the idea of getting conciliation because there is a stop sign, a terminal point, at the end of the road, so far as this particular Commission's activities are concerned, will not be present, thereby, in my judgment, making the job more difficult for the Commission and more difficult for the respondents. Proceedings before the Commission in one place and under rules of procedure which even accommodate appearances in person will hardly be as costly as proceedings in the courts. Yet, this is the only recourse the Commission would have, under the amendment.

So far as the practice of the various commissions is concerned, there is a very good reason why the cease-and-desist authority has been granted to so many of these commissions, and that reason is precisely why we who feel as we do are resisting this particular amendment so strongly. These commissions, after all, are, in a sense, tribunals for administrative purposes, designed to do a particular job with a particular kind of expertise and with the great desirability of trying to curtail the difficulties surrounding that job by proceedings which are, as it were, in house. This does not mean any lack of protection so far as concerns equal opportunity to be heard and to have witnesses, and so forth—the due process which is required in these cases; but it does mean a far greater informality of procedure and a far less expensive procedure than is provided for by the courts.

I might point out, too, that under an amendment which I sponsored, we have the provision for the appointment of four additional commissions, in the discretion of the President, should the burden of work which is involved require it; and that also goes to facilitating and making it possible for the Commission to do its work within the cease-and-desist context.

So, in my judgment, if we are going to go to the court route—the Senate has not decided that yet, but it will, with respect to the amendment which is now again before the Senate—that court route should at least be within the control of lawyers, at least until it gets to the Supreme Court, where there are problems of basic policy on the part of the Solicitor General for all the courts of the United States, and certainly in the appellate courts it should continue to be within the control of the Commission's own lawyers, so that some unity of approach, some coordination of their efforts, in respect of all these cases may be effected.

The interesting thing about those who argue against the cease-and-desist power is that I really believe it is going to be to their very serious detriment. I believe that by giving a power to the Commission with no alternative whatever to institute suits, they are goi to make it much stiffer and much more expensive for themselv with less certainty—and the businessman is always looking for c tainty—in the way of decision, because of the great diversity of t views of judges, the very different constructions of the law whi are received in various courts, with no settlement of the law in final way until it actually is in the U.S. Supreme Court for fi determination.

I cannot see how the path to efficiency, administrative decisiven or any of the other aspects of this matter will be easier if the recou is to litigation instead of to the likelihood—because that has be the record of all these agencies—that the overwhelming majority cases will be settled, compromised, conciliated, or agreed upon by cea and-desist orders entered, as is very frequently the case. For exampl we have the NLRB which has shown an extraordinary basis for tha all of which is designed to bring the procedure within manageab bounds in time and in due course. I hope very much, therefore, tha the Senate—I shall have quite a few of these amendments whi will go both to this amendment and to parts of the bill which is soug to be stricken itself—will look favorably on this amendment and least——

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Beall). The time of the Senator fro
New York has expired.

Mr. Javits. How much time has expired?

The Presiding Officer. Ten minutes.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President——

Mr. Dominick. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from Colorado will state it.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, am I recognized?

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from New Jersey is reco nized.

Mr. Dominick. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jers yield the floor to me? I should like to find out what happens wh presumably Senators are trying to amend my amendment and I not even have any time, as it is under the control either of t manager of the bill or the Senator from New York.

The Presiding Officer. The agreement entered into provided f time to be under the control of the manager of the bill and the mov of the amendment.

Mr. Dominick. I would then ask the manager of the bill and th mover of the amendment if they would allocate to me some time—couple of minutes periodically is all I need.

Mr. Williams. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Col rado that I fully intend to offer and suggest that some of the ti that I control be used by the Senator from Colorado if he so desir I happen to be in a position where I do support the amendment offer by the Senator from New York, so that, if anyone opposed shou have the time under the unanimous consent request, it is not provid for, is it?

The Presiding Officer. The Senator is correct. Time has not be provided for under the unanimous consent agreement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would be happy to yield time to the Senator from Colorado, with the understanding that the time granted is not yielded back.

Mr. DOMINICK. I would suggest that a far more equitable way would be to allow the Senator from Colorado, as the mover of the amendment which is under discussion and which is being amended, to take time in opposition to any amendments that may be offered to it, and that there would be unanimous-consent request to supplant the other one.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps that could be worked out with another one, say, striking the time limitation on amendments.

Mr. DOMINICK. I would not agree to that.

Mr. JAVITS. If the Senator will yield, I think that the Senator makes a proper condition. I thoroughly agree that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) should have time and should not have the privilege of yielding it back, which seems to me to be eminently fair.

I am sure that the manager of the bill would gladly assign to the Senator who wishes to defend the amendment—to wit, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick)—and anyone he might suggest, half the time, as a pragmatic thing. That would be better and fairer to us, considering the circumstances.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That was to be the offer on this amendment. Until we might work out other settlements, I would offer that to the Senator from Colorado; that is, my time on this amendment, with the understanding that it be used in debate and not yielded back.

Mr. DOMINICK. Will the Senator yield me 5 minutes for the purpose of making some parliamentary inquiries and asking a question or two of the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from New York?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. DOMINICK. A parliamentary inquiry first, if I may, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will state it.

Mr. DOMINICK. How much time is there on amendments to the amendment No. 611 now pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty minutes for each amendment.

Mr. DOMINICK. Fifteen minutes per side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Per side.

Mr. DOMINICK. If there is only one side, then only 15 minutes; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is divided, 15 minutes to the mover of the amendment and 15 minutes to the manager of the bill, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams), without a proviso as to which side of the question they may be.

Mr. DOMINICK. So that on future unanimous-consent requests we make, then, we had better make a provision in there that someone is entitled to speak against an amendment, instead of just the 30 minutes. Is that in order as a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would have to draw a conclusion from that, which he is not competent to draw.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield, without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. DOMINICK. I am happy to yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous conse in fairness to Senators who may wish to oppose an amendment in t second degree, that after the pending amendment is disposed of, ti on any additional amendments in the second degree be equally divid between the mover of such and the manager of the bill, except wh the manager of the bill favors such an amendment, in which case t time in opposition to any amendment in the second degree would under the control of the minority leader or his designee.

Mr. JAVITS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I shou like to be frank with the Senator from West Virginia. I do not thi it is fair to us, with the circumstances which have developed wh every legitimate advantage has been taken of the rules, for us to wai the rules. This unanimous-consent agreement confined us to 20 minut on the motion to reconsider. We had to abide by the rules and ti was promptly yielded back on the side of the mover. What the Senat is asking us to do, if we agree, is to bobtail every 30-minute deba into a 15-minute debate.

There is no question about the fact that the Senator from Ne Jersey (Mr. Williams) will allow half the time to the opponents whatever amendments I, or he, or any other Senator might make.
that time is granted under unanimous consent, it can be yielded bac
That is something we do not want. So that I would ask the Senator, all fairness, whether he could not amend the request to provide for tha by providing that the time may not be yielded back except by unan mous-consent request.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I so amend my reque

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-conse request?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object ju a minute—if we have the right to be in opposition to the amendmen
I think we would have the right, then, to do whatever we wanted wi that time, yield it up or yield it back. I do not see that we should penalized if we wanted to yield it back. Then the other side gets a extra 15 minutes.

I have cooperated here before. The Senator from New York, in o of the other debates before we adjourned or recessed, I remember that took about 20 minutes and he took about an hour and 20 minutes, b cause that was the amount of time he requested.

Similarly, I remember that the Senator from Wisconsin did the sa thing in reverse, giving us an hour and he took only 15 minutes; so th this has been worked out before, where we have an amendment bein offered to which someone may be in objection. I would think that t share of the time should be allocated to the person suggesting t amendment and he should be able to do whatever he wants to d with that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous conse request?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, as modified, I would have to objec because at this point it does not do me any good.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, in the interest of fairne to those who oppose an amendment in the second degree, I repeat m unanimous consent request——

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have a suggestion. I would suggest that we let this particular amendment stand and let the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) allow 15 minutes to the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK) without the right of yielding back the time, and then, if he will be kind enough to reconsider, asking unanimous consent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Colorado has expired.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the 5 minutes which have just been consumed in discussing this point not be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. It was my thought that I had exempted the pending amendment from my request. If I did not, I would like to do that.

Mr. JAVITS. May I ask the Senator——

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I withhold that.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey then yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 5 minutes under the previous——

Mr. DOMINICK. I rise to ask the Senator from New Jersey and/or the Senator from New York—probably both—whether they anticipate having a large number of amendments to this, so that it will be improbable that we will get to a vote on my amendment tonight.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I indicated informally to the Senator from Colorado, I had withheld some of the amendments I had, as I wanted to get to a final decision on the amendment; but now that it is reconsidered, I have several that I now have an opportunity to bring up and I feel that I will be bringing up. So that it is unlikely that we will come to a final vote on the Senator's amendment this evening.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York if he has a number of other amendments.

Mr. JAVITS. I have quite a few amendments, both to the amendment and to the part which is sought to be stricken. I feel that it is important to bring them up.

Mr. DOMINICK. In light of the Senator's statement then on a previous occasion that it is always nice to let people know ahead of time when we are to vote, am I correct in anticipating that we will not vote before 11 o'clock tomorrow morning on the merits of amendment No. 611?

Mr. JAVITS. I cannot control that at all. The Senator controlling that is on the aisle. I have a good many other amendments, and I believe that the Senator from New Jersey also does.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, how much of my 5 minutes do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I will not be very long. This is a very simple amendment. What the Senator from New York is saying is that the Attorney General and the Justice Department should not be entitled to appear on behalf of the Commission in the course of a appeal.

It strikes me that this is going pretty far when we put a provision in legislation that the Department of Justice is not entitled t appear on behalf of the Commission on an appeal. For that reason, am opposed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator cannot suggest the absence a quorum under the precedents if the Senator has only a little tim remaining, except by unanimous consent, until he yields the time bac

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twelve minutes remain.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask that committe staff people be cleared from the well.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, how much of the 12 minutes do I have

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has 5 min utes, and 7 minutes remain to the Senator from New Jersey.

The Senators could yield back their time and then suggest the a sence of a quorum.

Mr. JAVITS. I understand that. I yield back the remainder of m time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my tim and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The clerk will ca the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the orde for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

he Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Randolph), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hughes), and the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson) would each vote "yea."

Mr. Scott. I announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) is absent on official business.

The Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cooper) is necessarily absent to attend the funeral of a friend.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Mundt) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft) is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Brock), the Senators from Kansas (Mr. Dole and Mr. Pearson), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. Griffin), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy) are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy), would vote "yea."

The pair of the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft) has been previously announced.

On this vote the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield) is paired with the Senator from Kansas (Mr. Dole). If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon would vote "yea" and the Senator from Kansas would vote "nay."

So Mr. Javits' amendment to Mr. Dominick's amendment (No. 61 was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by whi the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the tab The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the Domini amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read the amendment to the Domini amendment as follows: "On page 5, strike out line 24."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recogniz for 5 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, this is an amendment to the amendmer It would strike that part of the amendment of the Senator fro Colorado which relates to page 65, lines 23 and 24, of the bill.

If Senators will refer to that particular section, they will find th page 65, lines 23 and 24, applies the provisions of another secti of the Equal Employment Opportunities Act, to wit, 706(q) throug (w), to civil actions brought by Federal Government employees und the equal employment opportunity protections of the law. The Senat from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) proposes to strike that out. Sectio 706(q) through 706(w) will no longer apply if the amendment shou pass unamended.

If you refer to those provisions, insofar as they are applicable, y find that the main point is that where the complainant is suing court, you have arrived at the stage of the proceeding where has that remedy, and in such circumstances as the court may dee just, the court may appoint an attorney for the complainant a authorize the commencement of the action without the payment fees, costs, or security.

Mr. President, that is a very important right for the individual, ju as it is a very important right for a Government employee, for t individuals involved are not, in the main, high salaried, in that the who would be likely to sue in these equal employment opportunity cas are fairly modest people.

So I see no reason, Mr. President, why in the one case, to wit, that the normal complainant who is not a Government employee with remedy in court that complainant shall be the beneficiary of a cour appointed lawyer, and not have to pay these costs or securities a hy this provision should be stricken out when it comes to a Federal overnment employee who has to sue and is also a person, because at is the generality of the cases, of modest means.

So the motion which I make is to strike out the provision of the Dominick amendment which would withdraw that opportunity from Government employee. I do not see how we can very well make iat distinction.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The nays and nays were ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, again, this amendment goes to the effort phase the Dominick amendment—and we will be doing that, I iink, for a little while—to whatever the Senate may wish to do in spect of exercising its will, but to fashion it so that at last when it is esented to the Senate finally, as it now will be, it will be a fair id balanced proposition. If the complainant is going to have nothing it a remedy in court, at least let us lock that up in the best way we n, and that is the point of this amendment, as it was of the preceding nendment.

Mr. President, one other thing which I think is important in this gard: We have now learned through hard experience the critical ass which is involved in the choice of a lawyer. It is interesting to me at one of the things we have learned about the poor is that they lue dignity even over and above money and what one would think perficially would alleviate their immediate distress. We have found—is goes for Senator Dominick and myself, both of us are rather nior on the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, as well as enator Williams and others—that one of the most important aspects our antipoverty program is the legal services program.

It is true that Members have various complaints about it, and we e trying to deal with those, but essentially the idea that a poor man n have a lawyer, too, is an extremely attractive proposition to him, id this amendment which I have offered is offered very much in that me spirit, that as we are going to do what we can to get legal service or the complainant who is not a Government employee, let us at ast do our utmost to lay on with an even hand as far as the com-ainant who is a Goverment employee is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, would the Senator from Colorado ke to have some of the time that I have allotted to me?

Mr. DOMINICK. I shall in a moment, but not just right away.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the enate, it is evident that we are not going to make much more progress is evening on the pending legislation, the EEOC measure. There ve been some indications that some Members wanted the vote put off the pending amendment until Wednesday. Frankly, I think that do so would be a disservice to the Senate, and very likely is a dis rvice to the very important legislation under consideration.

I would call to the attention of the Senate that we have been on the esent legislation almost a week. The end is not in sight. The Presi-nt sent up another very important piece of legislation which was introduced by request by the distinguished Senator from New Yo (Mr. Javits) and the distinguished Senator from Oregon (Mr. Pac wood). It is my understanding that hearings may get underway the legislation—involving the west coast dock situation—around t middle of the week, and if legislation is reported out. It will rece expeditious consideration.

Then we have a higher education bill, which is going to take so time because of the busing question inherent therein. Very likely will have the foreign aid appropriation bill, which will also be co tentious. Then around the middle of next month, hopefully, thou not at the rate we are going, we will have an equal rights for wom amendment, and in the meantime we will have 4 or 5 days off the Lincoln recess.

Then we have the voter registration bill to consider and H.R. 1 welfare reform and social security—both likewise contentious. We ha a farm bill, the Smith-Melcher bill, on which the Agriculture Comm tee held hearings this morning. I am assuming that it may be report out later this week. It likewise is a contentious piece of legislation.

Then we have war powers legislation on the calendar, another fo eign aid authorization, and very likely a minimum wage bill and oth items.

Every Member has received, or should have received, an outline as what the recess schedule will be for this year. Every Member is awa of the fact that in early July there will be a Democratic Conventio and that that will take several weeks, because of the fact that t Fourth of July period comes in between.

In the latter part of August, there will be a Republican Conventio and that will take at least 10 days for the consideration of the matte which will come before that meeting.

Insofar as the attendance of the Senate is concerned, it leaves mu to be desired. Last week, after a month off, we had an average of 55 56 Senators in attendance. Today we had a high of 85, which now down to a high of 74 to 76 or 77; and I assume that as time goes o that number may decrease.

We have a job to do, no matter what our outside interests may h
The pending issue is a very important question, because it deals wi people and their rights; I think it is one of the most important que tions which will come before the Senate this year and it will be treat as such.

However, I would express the hope to my colleagues that they wou think this matter through and do what they could in behalf of the we fare of the Senate and its consideration of the legislation before Earlier I was fearful of amendments to be offered on that side of t aisle. Now I am up against the fact that we have amendments offere from this and that side of the aisle, and it looks like the weapo in the hands of Senators are being used, and not discriminately b indiscriminately, and therefore the reason for these few brief r marks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Every proposal I have mentioned today is going take days and days. There is no easy item of legislation to be co idered in the next several months. Furthermore, we have appropria-ion bills to consider and other pieces of legislation which I have not ven mentioned at this time.

So I would hope, Mr. President, that it would be possible to achieve degree of cooperation between those who are opposed to and those ho are in favor of the bill, those who want to offer amendments, to ie extent that it might be possible not to waste the time of the Senate, s we are today, but to arrive at a solution which would perhaps call or a vote at a time certain tomorrow afternoon on the pending busi-ess. Everyone knows what it is; it is the Dominick amendment.

A great deal of maneuvering has been going on on both sides, and iat maneuvering is all legal; but it does not help the Senate to be ymied this early in the session with this type of schedule confront-g us.

Therefore, without consulting anyone, I ask unanimous consent iat the vote on the Dominick amendment occur at 3 o'clock tomorrow 'ternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I ould like to consult Senator Williams on this subject—how does the enator from Montana expect to give us an opportunity to deal with ie amendments to the Dominick amendment? A number of things the Dominick amendment really deserve correction—for all we iow, it may be adopted and therefore it has concentrated our atntion upon it.

Frankly, I do not believe that the amendment I am now proposing by any means frivolous. It is a serious matter and really affects ie rights which will remain in the individual when, as, and if this nendment is dealt with.

Personally, I am thoroughly sympathetic to the Senator, and I ish to cooperate with him. He knows me very well in that respect. should like to coincide with his view. Will he give us an idea as how we can deal with these amendments to the Dominick amend-ent within the time bracket he has mentioned?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would suggest that no further amendments be fered this afternoon. I would suggest that we return, if possible, to e vote on the Dominick amendment immediately after the concluon of the mornining business tomorrow and that the time be equally vided between the distinguished chairman of the committee, the enator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams), and the distinguished ponsor of the amendment, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ominick).

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I still ask the question. We do not want shut off amendments to the Dominick amendment. How will we commodate those amendments?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York eld?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield myself 1 minute to yield to the Senator from olorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized r 1 minute.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would state that it is my understanding that the irpose of those who are in favor of the Dominick amendments is to achieve another vote on that amendment, in the hope that this t it will carry. It is my understanding, also, that those who are oppo to the Dominick amendment are offering amendments at this t not for the purpose so much of strengthening that amendment for the purpose—at least in part—of delaying long enough so t the troops can be gathered here in force to vote on the amendm itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield the Senator 3 minutes of my time.

Mr. President, as we come to examine the amendment carefully, do find a good many things in it that need to be changed. I wo suggest for consideration the possibility that we might have the portunity to amend the Dominick amendment through tomorrow vote the first thing on Wednesday. Would that possibly be agreea to the majority leader?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I would hope that the distinguish Senator would reassess his position and recognize, as I am sure must, the difficulties which confront us in the Senate this year.
a matter of fact, in all my years—I have never seen such an ardu schedule in outline confronting this body at this time. On top of t we have the two conventions. Unless something is done to br order out of the difficult situation which confronts us and all Senat work together, on both sides of the aisle, frankly, I think we going to be in a hell of a mess.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I respectfully suggest to the majo leader that we have a brief quorum call so that I can confer w Senator Williams. I ask unanimous consent that the time consum in the quorum call be charged to my time and that of Senator Willia

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no and it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the or for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Harris). Without objection, it is ordered.

Mr. DOMINICK. I thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. President, I want to say for the record that this particu amendment language was included, as the specific provisions of bill deal only with Federal employees for whom we had a differ procedure. They go through their own agencies and then they h the right as a Federal employee to go to the civil service board o go through the Federal court system. The amendment to strike language was included because the language to be struck was thou to be inappropriate to the specialized grievance procedures adop in committee for Federal employees. A closer reading of sec. 706 through (w) does indicate that language for providing attorne fees and waiving court costs are applicable.

Therefore, I have no objection to the Senator's amendment, an he would want to withdraw his yea and nay request, that would fine with me, and we can accept the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, just so that I am aware of the situati
I hope that any other Senator who does not agree with that proced will let me know because I want to request that the majority leader ask unanimous consent to vacate the order for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be vacated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield back my time.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Harris). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, there will be no further votes tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would make inquiry of the distinguished majority leader. The Parliamentarian has informed the Chair that there was a unanimous-consent request. Has that been withdrawn?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Whatever it was, I ask unanimous consent that it be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The request was to vote at 3 p.m.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that time on any amendment in the second degree, which is offered to the pending amendment of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided between the mover of such amendment and the manager of the bill, except in instances, if there be such, when the manager of the bill is in favor of the amendment in the second degree, in which instance the control of the time in opposition to the amendment in the second degree be under the control of the minority leader or his designee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, as the matter now stands, time on any motion, appeal, or point of order, with the exception of nondebatable motions, is limited to 20 minutes; is that not correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct, the Chair is so informed.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Is it not also correct, Mr. President, that such time under the agreement of last week is under the control of the mover of such motion or appeal or point of order and the manager of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I think it might only fair that the same parallel construction be given to the agreement w respect to motions, appeals, or points of order, as in the case of amen ments in the second degree.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that such time on any moti
